INTRODUCTORY

The World Missionary Conference, convened in Edinburgh in June, 1910, stands as the most remarkable missionary gathering that the world has ever seen. As its chairman, John R. Mott, LL.D., has said: "To a remarkable degree it faced the wholeness of the task and the oneness of the task. Through the work of its eight Commissions it helped greatly to usher in an era of more scientific study of missionary questions. That which gave the Conference its chief distinction, however, was the fact that it interpreted itself, not as an end, but as a beginning. Its one and only creative act was the appointment of a Continuation Committee to carry forward the investigations begun by the Commissions and to preserve and extend the atmosphere and spirit of the Conference."

One of the most significant of the subsequent activities of the Continuation Committee created in 1910 is the Asiatic tour of investigation undertaken at the Committee's desire by Dr. Mott. That body had requested its chairman to visit "the mission fields, acquainting missionaries and native leaders with the work and plans of the Continuation Committee, studying how missionary bodies on the field and this Committee may be brought into most mutually helpful relations, and assisting the work of the Special Committees in such other ways as may be determined by the Executive acting in consultation with them." In accordance with that request Dr. Mott spent the period from October, 1912, to May, 1913, in an extended tour through the principal Asiatic fields—fields embracing some three-fourths of the inhabitants of the non-Christian world.

In order to accomplish as much as possible within the limited time, Dr. Mott divided the fields into a number of areas in each of which a conference of leaders was held, eighteen sectional gatherings in all. In addition to these, national conferences were convened in India, China, and Japan, attended by members appointed by each of the sectional conferences of the country concerned. The list of these twenty-one conferences in their chronological order follows:

- Colombo Conference, 63 members, November 11-13, 1912.
- Madras Conference, 73 members, November 18-20, 1912.
- Bombay Conference, 53 members, November 25-27, 1912.
- Jubbulpore Conference, 51 members, November 29 to December 2, 1912.
- Allahabad Conference, 53 members, December 3-6, 1912.
- Lahore Conference, 50 members, December 9-11, 1912.
- Calcutta Conference, 61 members, December 16-18, 1912.
- India National Conference, Calcutta, 58 members, December 18-21, 1912.
- Rangoon Conference, 51 members, January 14-16, 1913.
- Singapore Conference, 51 members, January 21-23, 1913.
- Canton Conference, 81 members, January 30 to February 4, 1913.
- Shanghai Conference, 92 members, February 11-15, 1913.
- Tsinanfu Conference, 63 members, February 19-21, 1913.
- Peking Conference, 88 members, February 25-28, 1913.
- Hankow Conference, 81 members, March 5-8, 1913.
- China National Conference, Shanghai, 116 members, March 11-14, 1913.
- Moukden Conference, 165 members, March 22-24, 1913.
- Seoul Conference, 109 members, March 25-28, 1913.
- Tokyo Conference of Missionaries, 72 members, April 3-5, 1913.
- Tokyo Conference of Japanese Leaders, 57 members, April 7-9, 1913.
- Japan National Conference, Tokyo, 95 members, April 9-11, 1913.

It will be seen that the total number of members was 1,583, and an examination of the rolls shows that of these, 222, or fourteen per cent., were women, while the Asiatic members were almost thirty-five per cent. of the total number, a novel and a most significant fact.

The conferences were devoted largely to discussions based upon a syllabus of important questions (see Appendix A) sent to members in advance of the conferences. In many cases valuable papers were prepared as introductory to the main topics. Most of the time, however, was spent in discussion in order that there might be the maximum expression of opinion and experience from those present. In every case the conferences recorded the consensus of opinion through findings as to the main themes discussed, these conclusions being formulated by committees appointed for the various topics and then rediscussed and amended. This volume contains the official text of these findings in each case, as finally amended and approved by the entire conference concerned. Except in the case of the national conferences, the members of a given conference did not have access to the findings of preceding ones, a fact which gives great significance to the unanimity of the conclusions reached on many questions.

While the Edinburgh World Missionary Conference was more comprehensive in its scope and personnel, and though its extended report is of inestimable value, this localized and more thorough-going series of conferences fully deserves Dr. Mott's discriminating estimate. "Never before," he writes, "have the great questions involved in the establishment of Christ's Kingdom on earth been discussed by so many recognized leaders of the Christian forces throughout the non-Christian world, nor has there ever been such an expression of united judgment and desire on the part of workers of the various Christian bodies. This lends great weight to their conclusions, possibly even greater than were these the official deliverances of legislative or ecclesiastical bodies. It is believed that they will command the confidence of Christians everywhere and that they will profoundly influence missionary thought and practice."

The editor here presents the text of the findings of the twenty-one conferences in the form that it assumed when brought officially before the members of the Continuation Committee of the World Missionary Conference convened at The Hague, November 13-21, 1913. The arrangement, however, has been altered. In that document the findings on all subjects discussed at a given conference were printed continuously; here they are arranged topically, so that the reader can see at a glance what the various conferences believe concerning any of the great questions discussed—Occupation, or Christian Education, for example. He has also prefixed to the findings of each chapter introductory paragraphs, in which a few of the many issues involved are very briefly commented upon. These comments do not possess any official authority whatsoever; they are intended rather to call attention to salient points, thus serving as a Wegweiser for younger readers who may find the wealth of recommendation and weighty repetitions somewhat confusing without some such finger-posts. They should not be regarded as at all exhaustive in their reference to important points in the chapters.

The lists following each chapter refer the student to other sections of the volume where additional material may be found bearing upon the theme under consideration. The editor has added a very few references to other material not found in the volume. In general, nothing is cited which has a merely historical value, as the object in view is to recommend modern discussions of these themes. The fact that other sources do not in all cases agree with the findings of the Asiatic conferences does not invalidate at all these latest decisions, which should be given greatest weight because of their more authoritative sponsors.

A study of the volume cannot fail to be rewarding, though as a book to be hastily read it is not likely to be greatly valuable. The conferences gathered in the strategic centres of India, Malaysia and the Far East. Their membership included representatives of all the leading denominations and societies labouring in the fields where the conferences were held. The average number of societies and special missionary enterprises represented at the national conferences of India, China, and Japan was thirty-six, which suggests the catholicity of view which finds expression in this volume. Hence we have here for Asiatic Missions documents equivalent to the decrees of the early ecumenical councils of the Church; though unlike those decisions affecting matters of faith and order, these have to do with the most vital problem of bringing Asia to a saving knowledge of the Father of all men and of His Christ.

The findings of these deliberative bodies are to be studied geographically and racially, for that is one reason why so large a number of conferences was held. Missionary candidates, or societies looking forward to service or to an extension of operations and policies in a given section of India or China, will naturally be most deeply interested in findings relating to that region. The general student of mission policies will find his chief interest in the conclusions of men and women who record their best judgment concerning national units of the Orient. Failure to make racial and geographical allowances will lead superficial readers to wrong conclusions as to the wisdom of certain findings. Any differences of view herein expressed may be regarded as wise adaptations of common principles to local or national requirements.

The main themes chosen for conference discussion are an instructive index of present-day thought concerning the missionary enterprise. At Edinburgh, in 1910, only eight great topics were considered, a survey of the mission fields, the place of the Church and of Christian education in carrying the Gospel to those lands, the message of Christianity to the non-Christian religions, preparation of the missionaries, the important problems and policies of the home base, the relation of missions to governments, and the attainment of efficiency through co-operation and unity. Women's work had no distinct place in that programme, though it was assumed to be included under the general discussion of the Church, Christian education, etc. Medical missions had to be omitted because of lack of time, and not because of their unimportance. As the triumphs of medical missions have been mainly won in the countries under consideration, that topic could not fail to be prominent here. So, too, most of the non-Christian women of the world are massed in these lands and have been made the subject of special consideration. The home base would naturally be omitted, and relations between the missions and governments are on the whole so friendly and mutually helpful in Eastern and Southern Asia that that topic could be eliminated. Taking the Edinburgh Reports and this volume as complementary and supplementary works, we have the virtual proclamation of the Church that its great objectives are here authoritatively set forth, so far as missions are concerned.

Herein lies the inspiration of such a volume as this. The twentieth century scribe of the Kingdom of Heaven "bringeth forth out of his treasure things new and old." The many "old" and self-evident statements of policy in these findings indicate the continuance of methods and the perennial existence of views which have been fruitful from apostolic days. We are heirs and continuators of a work which had its foregleams in Old Testament times, whose norm was found in that company of which Jesus was the head and St. Paul the first great exemplar, and which through the centuries of the Church's extension unto the uttermost parts of the earth has busied the glorious vanguard of Christianity. But a brighter and a more strenuous day has dawned. The individualism of our fathers on the mission field has developed through individuals won for Christ into a social, intellectual, religious and nationalistic enterprise by means of which the Church of to-day attempts to transform races and nations. It is true that Carey, the "father" of British foreign missions, and many another labourer in Asiatic harvest fields, notably Morrison, Duff, Hamlin, and Verbeck, strove toward such nation-wide influence; yet only in our day has it been given to minister in so catholic a manner to all the needs of mankind. Behind the repetitions of this volume which set forth the multitudinous variations of basal transforming processes, the seeing eye discerns the best master-workmen of our time as they compare their scientific experimentation in spiritual and national realms and formulate the "permanent law" underlying "the evanescent circumstance." We thus are reaching what Aristotle long ago described: "Art [we should say science] begins when from a great number of experiences one general conception is formed which will embrace all similar cases." Professor J. Arthur Thomson, of Aberdeen, after describing the emotional assets contributed by science to religion, adds: "Is there not practical value, too, both of encouragement and warning in the scientific view that it is an ascent, and not a descent, that is behind us—and in front of us, too, we hope? Everything seems to indicate that it is an increasingly controllable future that lies before us here, and it surely adds zest to our life to feel that we can share in the 'increasing purpose' of evolution, in the working out of what seems like a great and beautiful thought." The science of missions, which finds its best expression, so far as the farther Orient is concerned, in the volume before us, humbly attempts to formulate the best and most divinely guided experience of our time in such forms as will enable the Church and its modern apostles to hasten the coming of the glad day when the innumerable multitude of that continent which was the earthly home of our Lord shall know Him and accept His manifold salvation.

OCCUPATION

I. OCCUPATION

A missionary map of Southern and Eastern Asia reveals wide expanses of territory without any mission stations, thus making it impracticable for home-staying populations to hear the Gospel. Even where the carmine underscorings of stations appear to be sufficiently numerous, the maps do not indicate such facts as the non-existence of a single Christian in populations aggregating nineteen millions in Bengal, or that Yunnan and Kweichow Provinces in China have an average of only one missionary to 326,000 and 332,000 of their respective populations. They do not suggest the item that China's most sparsely populated province, Kweichow, has more than twice the density of human life that one finds in the continental United States, nor that India's Oudh has a density exceeding our most densely populated state, Rhode Island, by twenty-nine. If the towns and villages of India and China were stippled into these maps, the surface would be wholly filled with minute dots, the homes of persons waiting for the Gospel.

Such maps do not indicate unreached classes in these lands—most of India's 66,623,412 Moslems and China's 10,000,000. The Church does not realize that the handful of missionaries cannot set aside more pressing claims to minister to defectives, criminals, fallen women, ricksha-pullers, clerks, merchants—nor even those most strategic classes, the students and officials—except incidentally. Who cares for Formosa's 121,000 head hunters? Language difficulties prevent the Java workers from preaching to Chinese immigrants, and the Indians of Malaysia are similarly neglected.

Overlapping in a few cases becomes evident in such a map as Messrs. Chapelain, Forsyth and Bergen prepared for "Shantung, 1912"; and Mr. A. Miller's "Missionary Map of Chekiang Province" is so graphic and telling, that the China missionaries desire him to be detailed to the special task of preparing for that Republic other statistical and geographical surveys. They also refer to Dr. Cochrane's "Survey of the Missionary Occupation of China" and its ample accompanying Atlas.

For such reasons we have this chapter. It calls for geographical study, that Missionary Societies may know the location of existing work and, even more, the absence of it; also that great highways of access may be known with their strategic centres, and that physical barriers to free intercourse of peoples may become evident. Sociological facts enter into the survey; for caste and clan are divisive and obstructive, though often eventuating in advantage to our propaganda. Very wisely does it include the racial relations and characteristics of nations ministering and ministered to, since national consciousness is acute among these Asiatic peoples, and the old principles of paternalism are increasingly yielding to the newer fraternalism.

Weaknesses in missionary policies are laid bare here and there. Yielding to the necessities of early treaty port regulations in Japan is largely responsible for the present-day fact of more than thirty-eight millions of unevangelized Japanese, mostly in rural districts. Shanghai is filled with missionaries, while multitudes in its province have never seen one; and Peking with its old junk port, Tungechow, holds nearly six-tenths of Chihli's provincial force. In Szechwan convenience has dominated the distribution of missionaries, rather than a wise strategy. Institutional work was reported in more than one Conference, notably at Rangoon, as having sorely interfered with the primary evangelistic obligation. On almost every page are suggestions of the neglected duty of arousing among church members that sentiment voiced in the India National Conference, "Every Christian a soul-winner; the whole Church a living witness to her Lord!" Men from a given people, more than in the past, must be inspired and trained to be effective winners of their own nation, according to the Confucian maxim that the ax which fells the tree gets its helve from the branches.

To alter the Asiatic missionary map, local councils and National Committees are constituted to be boards of Christian strategy. Study of the situation in its entirety, wise recommendations based thereon, a fuller co-operation than has obtained hitherto, and a campaign of home and field awakening in order to ensure adequate forces and funds as well as intelligent spiritual support, may be expected from an application of the chapter.

Colombo Conference

1. Neglected Peoples and Areas.

This Conference finds that, in the main, missionary work at the present time is located in the most populous and most accessible areas and is reaching the Sinhalese and Tamil speaking people. Very little, except through our schools, is being done for the Mohammedan men. The Parsis and the forest Veddahs are neglected, but they are a mere handful compared with the rest of the population. The most neglected areas, or areas in which most yet remains to be done, are:—

- (1) Much of the interior of the Western Province.
- (2) Sparsely populated regions such as the Tamankaduwa District, and the north-east portion of the North-western Province. In the Maldives, which also come under the Ceylon area, no mission work is being done.

2. Maps and Survey.

With a view to giving practical effect to our findings on occupation this Conference urges:—

- (1) The completion and reproduction of a missionary map or maps of Ceylon.
- (2) A careful periodic survey of the whole field.

Madras Conference

1. Survey Committee.

The Conference requests the Federal Missionary Council of South India [see under Co-operation] to appoint a special committee whose duty it shall be:—

- (1) To survey the whole field and to collect information with regard to the number of Christian workers and the kind of work they are doing in every taluk* and also in every town of more than 10,000 inhabitants.
- (2) To place these facts before the Missionary Societies which are at work, or which are contemplating work, in South

* "The Presidency is divided into districts, each district into divisions, each division into taluks."—Census of India, Madras, 1911.

India with a view to securing that every part of the field shall be brought under the care of some Mission and that every class of the community shall have the opportunity of hearing the Gospel.

2. Inadequate Occupation.

The Conference, while thankful for the comparatively large number of workers employed in South India, and for the Church which is growing up through God's blessing on their labours, desires to put on record its conviction that there are but few parts of the field which can be said to be adequately occupied. In support of this conviction it would point not only to the existence of districts where the occupation is confessedly inadequate, but also to facts, regarding even the best occupied portions, which are in danger of being overlooked. These facts are as follows:—

- (1) There are still large classes of the community for which little or no special work is done.
- (2) The opening of doors as a result of previous labours imposes on the Church an obligation to enter by them.
- (3) In particular, the mass movements which are taking place in many parts of the field furnish an opportunity for the extension of the Kingdom of God which should by no means be neglected.
- (4) While the existence or the possibility of such movements may determine the line of advance, the furnishing of workers which this entails should not (except as a last resort) be effected at the cost of existing work.

3. Urgent Needs.

In view of these facts the Conference holds that there is urgent need for an increase in the number of European missionaries, for an enlarged staff of Indian workers employed by the Missions, and for a great forward movement on the part of the Indian Church. Without attempting to decide as to the relative importance of these three lines of advance the Conference would point out that in the pioneer work which still remains to be done, and in the guidance of the Church in the early stages of its development, European workers are still required, and that for mission work foreign funds are still needed.

Bombay Conference

1. Further Study Needed.

This Conference, having considered with great interest the maps and tables of figures relating to the missionary occupation of the Bombay Presidency, finds that the subject urgently calls for further detailed scientific study and report.

2. Joint Agency Called For.

The deplorable fact that the Missionary Societies have thus far failed effectively to occupy certain districts of the Bombay Presidency (amounting to more than half the area and including one-third the population) and to reach certain immense groups of the people, including most of the Hindus of the higher and middle classes, and also of the Moslems, Jains, Lingayats and Parsis, indicates the need of an efficient joint agency to give special attention to the problems of missionary occupation and of the distribution of workers in the field.

3. Claims of Unoccupied Districts.

The Continuation Committee is respectfully advised that in the judgment of this Conference the conditions revealed by the statistical maps and tables call for great increase in the number of foreign missionaries, and that the home Churches and Societies should be urged, when extending their work, to consider what principles should be adopted as to the ratio of population to each missionary and the claims of unoccupied districts.

4. Appeal to the Indian Church.

At the same time the Conference appeals to the Indian Church to go forth in the true missionary spirit to occupy fully for Christ the unoccupied and poorly occupied fields.

Jubbulpore Conference

1. Unoccupied Fields.

The most pressing need is the more adequate occupation of the Native States as a whole, and particularly the Baghelkhand Agency and the greater part of Gwalior State.

2. Surveys.

It is very desirable that a thorough, scientific survey be made of the whole mission field in this area.

Allahabad Conference

1. Christian Community.

This Conference notes with thanksgiving that the Indian Christian community in the United Provinces has doubled in the last decade. The increase has been mostly in three divisions in the north-west of the Provinces. Nearly all the converts are drawn from one of the depressed Hindu castes, living in villages. The missionary force, foreign and Indian, is wholly inadequate for the teaching and uplifting of these lowly people, to say nothing of reaching the sixteen millions of Hindus and Mohammedans living in these three divisions.

2. Mission Personnel.

We find that in the six divisions in the south-east of the Provinces, with a population of more than thirty millions, there is a foreign missionary force of 83 men and 169 women, and an Indian force of 710 men and 788 women. In the Benares Division, with a population of more than four millions, there is a foreign force of 10 men and 14 women, and an Indian force of 31 men and 81 women. Portions of North Behar, the aboriginal tribes in the South Gaya District, and the Santali aboriginal tribes in the Monghyr District and on the border of Nepal are practically unreachd.

3. Survey.

This Conference recommends that the above facts be made known more fully to the Churches in India and in Christian lands, and that a thorough survey of the mission field be undertaken as one of the means to awaken Christians in India and in other lands to a sense of the magnitude of the task before us and of the feebleness of the efforts thus far put forth to make Christ known to the people of these Provinces.

4. Deaf-Mutes.

We find that for the 27,125 deaf-mutes in these Provinces there is no school or institution of any kind.

5. The Blind.

We find also that for the 105,722 blind of both eyes, living in these Provinces, there are only two institutions, one at Rajpur under mission auspices and the other at Allahabad under the Charitable Association.

6. Work for Defectives.

We recommend that these facts be made known as widely as possible in the hope that Missionary Societies may include in their activities the teaching of children who are blind or deaf-mutes, and if this be not practicable, that Missionary Societies for reaching these children be established.

Lahore Conference

1. British Baluchistan, Sind, and Native States.

While drawing attention to the still closed lands beyond the north-west frontier as a call to united prayer, this Conference would emphasize the great necessity of an immediate and large increase of foreign workers more fully to occupy large tracts of territory in British Baluchistan and Sind, and especially to enter the twenty-eight wholly untouched Native States of Rajputana and the Punjab.

2. The Mass Movement.

The recent mass movement among the depressed classes constitutes the most urgent claim upon the Missionary Societies and the Indian Church for a great increase in the number of workers, not only to overtake the work of training these new converts, but also to extend fully this work at this present critical time when many non-Christian bodies are seizing this opportunity, and this urgent extension in no way calls for any reduction of our present educational and other activities, but for many reasons rather accentuates the need of them.

3. Relative Neglect of the Villages.

This Conference calls attention to the relative neglect of the villages where the vast majority of the people are found, and in view of the ready response of the rural population to all forms of missionary activity, would strongly urge that this sphere of work be given more prominence in all plans of extension.

4. A Comprehensive Survey Needed.

It is highly desirable that a comprehensive survey of this area be carried out by a representative committee, both in regard to existing missionary work, and in view of further extension.

Calcutta Conference

1. Unreached Areas.

This Conference draws attention to the large number of self-contained areas which remain practically untouched by Christian influence and activity. There are 159 thanas* and police circles without a single Christian—or an aggregate of massed populations with a total of nineteen millions. As regards Protestant Christian workers, none have been reported from more than forty sub-divisions—showing an aggregate of unworked areas with a population of nine and one-half millions.

2. The Unit of Occupation.

This Conference finds that the distribution of Christians and of Christian workers is such that it will be wise in the future to make the sub-division of an administrative district, rather than the district itself, the unit of occupation. Sub-divisions have an average population of over 500,000 with an area of 500 to 700 square miles, and thanas an average population of about 100,000. No district should be reckoned as “occupied” which has not a missionary, Indian or European, with a staff of workers, in each sub-division. For effective occupation there should be sub-stations and continuous organized work in each thana of the sub-division.

*A thana is the largest administrative area under the sub-divisions and is controlled by a sub-inspector of police. Within the thana are usually several other circles or groups of villages.

3. Survey Called For.

This Conference finds that there is urgent need for a thorough and scientific survey of the missionary occupation of this field, setting forth the extent to which the various parts of the field are now occupied, and not overlooking the work of Roman Catholic Missions. The survey should indicate among other things:—

- (1) The utter inadequacy of the present force.
- (2) Particular fields and classes which have been neglected.
- (3) The work being done for women.
- (4) Medical work.
- (5) The extent to which the Indian Church is engaged in evangelistic effort.

4. Use of Survey Results.

This Conference thinks that the results of the survey should be communicated, not only to the home Boards with a view to reinforcements, but also to missionaries on the field, to the leaders of the Indian Church and to the several Provincial Governments. Missionaries and Indian church leaders should be invited to make suggestions as to any desirable and possible redistribution of forces.

5. Periodical Review of the Field.

This Conference thinks that the survey should be so conducted and its results so presented as to facilitate a periodical review of the progress made in the evangelization of the field.

6. Expediting the Survey.

The Committee to be appointed to take action upon the findings of this Conference should be entrusted with the task of arranging for the proposed survey as speedily as possible.

7. Expansion at Expense of Retrenchment.

This Conference does not recommend expansion, if mission work now being done is thereby curtailed.

India National Conference

i. The Situation.

This Conference, representing the vast field of the Indian Empire, recognizes, with deep gratitude to God, the steady growth of the Kingdom of Christ during the past decade, the special fruitfulness of work among the depressed classes and aboriginal tribes and the increasing interest and effort of the Indian Church in the evangelization of her own countrymen. Christian hearts are gladdened by the present missionary situation. However, a study of the findings of the Continuation Committee Conferences recently held reveals also the following facts:—

- (1) General:—Applying to the whole area.
 - a. There are large tracts of territory in each province wholly unoccupied for Christ.
 - b. There are entire communities, classes and castes almost untouched, even in so-called occupied areas.
- (2) Special:—Emphasizing the above.
 - a. In Bengal, according to the recent Government Census, there are 159 thanas or police circles, containing a total population of nineteen millions, without a single Christian living in them.
 - b. There are six divisions in the south-eastern portion of the United Provinces, with a population of thirty millions, and Behar with twenty-three millions, very inadequately occupied.
 - c. Bombay reports ten of its twenty-nine millions living in areas but slightly touched by missionary effort.
 - d. The Mohammedans of the Empire, sixty-six million strong, are not being effectively reached, especially in South and Mid-India.
 - e. A large number of the Native States, with a population of many millions, are still without a single Christian worker.
- (3) The above data, though incomplete, and lacking uniformity, give some indication of the serious situation in the present responsive attitude of the masses of the people, an attitude revealed by recent large accessions in the Punjab, in the United Provinces and in South India.

2. Survey.

This Conference notes that the findings of the Continuation Committee Conferences held in India are unanimous on the urgent need of a thorough, complete and scientific survey for the right consideration of the problems of occupation; and each Conference has already taken action towards this end. To be complete, such a survey would:—

(1) Necessitate the collection, arrangement and effective presentation of a very large quantity of detailed information regarding:—

- a. Unoccupied fields, their position, area, population as to number and density, races, castes, education, temporal position, accessibility (physical and spiritual), and relation to existing Missions.
- b. The unoccupied areas in fields called occupied, with the same particulars.

(2) Regard the Church in India as the essential centre of study and as the organism whose growth and activities will alone solve the stupendous problem of the evangelization of the Empire.

(3) Take within its purview the present distribution of the missionary forces, Indian and foreign, the classes of population already touched, rates of increase, reasons for rapidity or slowness of growth, degree of self-propagating power, and possibilities of extension. Institutional work of all kinds, for Christians and non-Christians, should receive consideration with respect to the needs of each district, and the provision already made by Government or other bodies. Areas of effective influence of the various missionary agencies should be indicated so far as these are discoverable. Records should be prepared which can be used for careful comparison in subsequent surveys, and all results possible should be presented in the form of statistics, maps and charts with interpretative notes.

Thus might we hope to obtain a complete survey of the whole continent from every point of view, which would not fail to constitute a most powerful appeal to the Indian Church and a strong argument for the renewed consecration of the Churches of Christendom to their foreign missionary enterprise.

3. National Committee on Survey.

This Conference, realizing that such a survey must follow uniform principles of investigation, co-ordination of facts and methods of presentation of results in each of its areas, recommends that the National Missionary Council [see under Co-operation] appoint, as one of its subordinate committees, a National Committee on Survey to expedite and co-ordinate any efforts that may be made by the Provincial Survey Committees already referred to. This National Committee on Survey shall avail itself of the help of the Committee of Survey and Occupation under the Continuation Committee of the Edinburgh Missionary Conference.

4. Interim Committee on Survey.

The matter, however, is so urgent, as affecting schemes of co-operation already under discussion and many other matters of growing importance to the missionary forces and leaders of the Indian Christian Church, that this Conference appoints the following Committee on Survey to act until the permanent Committee be appointed. It shall have power to fill vacancies and co-opt necessary help:—

Bengal	Rev. William Carey,
Madras	Rev. J. S. Chandler,
Bombay	Rev. W. H. Hannum,
Mid-India	Rev. J. T. Taylor,
United Provinces	Rev. J. J. Lucas, D.D.,
Punjab	S. K. Datta, M.B.,
Burma	Rev. W. H. S. Hascall,
Acting Convener	Rev. B. T. Badley.

5. Secretary on Survey.

This Conference is also convinced that the work of the Committee on Survey can be carried through satisfactorily only with the aid of a competent research secretary, able to devote at least two years (with an assistant, office, etc.) to the task. It appeals, therefore, to the Continuation Committee of the Edinburgh Conference for the necessary funds, approximately £500 per annum, and urgently requests that Committee, through its Sub-Committee on Survey and Occupation, to aid in securing the secretary needed at the earliest date possible.

6. Appeal.

In conclusion this Conference would point out that the above arrangements for a survey of the Indian field are not an end in themselves, but a means to an end shown to be of paramount importance by the present situation, namely, the clamant need of more aggressive, far-spread and conquering evangelistic effort; and, therefore, in calling attention to the many unoccupied fields, it is very far from the intention of this Conference to recommend the principle of diffusive and superficial work as opposed to that of concentration. What they desire and know to be possible in the providence of God is the adequate occupation of the whole field. The clear delimitation of regions where the population is entirely unreachd, and the indication of other areas lacking any continuous Christian effort, provide the necessary basis for effective appeals to the Churches in Christian lands and will also guide Mission Boards and field committees in planning for advance. But the chief need discovered by our review of the present situation is not so much the eloquent plea for foreign reinforcements it undoubtedly makes. It is rather that their consideration of the subject, so vast that it affects one-sixth of the human race, has led this Conference to perceive that the first call must be from them to all members of the Indian Church. The watchword of the hour needs to be "Every Christian a soul-winner, the whole Church a living witness to her Lord;" and this Conference feels impelled to issue a call for incessant and earnest prayer that the Lord of the harvest would Himself thrust forth more Indian labourers into the harvest fields of this Empire.

Rangoon Conference

1. Areas Practically Unoccupied and Races Unreachd.

In surveying the territory occupied in Burma this Conference recognizes, with deep gratitude to Almighty God, the splendid success which has attended the work of Christian missions among the Karens and other races in this province. It seems desirable, however, to emphasize the following facts:—

- (1) That no corresponding measure of general success has accompanied the work among the Burmans themselves who form the vast majority of the inhabitants of the country.
- (2) That there still remain large areas practically unoccupied by foreign missionaries and only scantily occupied by native helpers, namely, six districts in upper Burma, four in lower Burma in which there is no resident foreign missionary for Burmese work, and nearly the whole of Arracan Division, containing a Burmese-speaking population of nearly three million inhabitants.
- (3) That there are numerous hill tribes and other animistic races and also several immigrant races who are as yet almost or entirely unreached by missionary effort, and that in the absence of the knowledge of any higher or more spiritual religion, these races are gradually drifting into the dominant Buddhism of the country.
- (4) That the present missionary staff is very largely engaged in educational work, a work which the Conference holds to be of very great importance both for the conservation of the results of past effort and for the building up of a sturdy type of Christian manhood and womanhood among the people.

2. Proposals for a More Adequate Occupation of the Field.

In view of the above facts the Conference would earnestly recommend:—

- (1) That every effort be made to secure additional funds and workers for the immediate or early occupation in force of the areas still unoccupied or practically unoccupied.
- (2) That a special effort be made on behalf of the animistic races of Burma in this critical stage of their development.
- (3) That in the areas now occupied, both urban and rural, it is essential that the present staff be so strengthened that, without weakening in any sense the present educational phases of missionary activity, it may also be possible largely to increase the number of directly evangelistic missionaries and to emphasize aggressive evangelistic methods.

- (4) That a periodic survey of the field, say once in ten years, be made for the purpose of collecting all facts and information necessary to promote continuous, harmonious and proportionate growth in every part of the field and in every phase of the work.

Singapore Conference

I. Unoccupied Fields.

The Conference finds that adequate information regarding the occupation of Malaysia by mission forces is at present lacking. Such investigations as were possible before the Conference, together with the Conference discussions, indicate the following areas and language or tribal groups as entirely or almost entirely untouched by mission endeavours, except that in most of these areas the British and Foreign Bible Society is distributing the Scriptures by colportage:—

(1) Areas:—

- a. East Coast of the Malay Peninsula.
- b. Almost all of Sumatra except Batta Land, and neighbouring islands. (Achin is not yet opened to mission work by the Government.)
- c. Borneo, except Sarawak, British North Borneo, and the valleys of the Barito and Kapuas rivers.
- d. Celebes is only worked in Minahassa, Mongondou and the central district.
- e. In the group of large islands east of Java only on Flores, Timor and Soemba are there mission stations.
- f. In Dutch New Guinea only the north coast is being worked.
- g. On most of the smaller islands no work is being done.

(2) Languages:—

- a. Of the immigrants from India, the Telugus and those

- from North India are untouched, and among Tamils there are but few workers, and only one or two foreign missionaries can speak the language.
- b. The so-called aboriginal tribes of the Peninsula are untouched, except in one place by the Roman Catholics.
 - c. Of the immigrants from China, no work is being done among the Hailams, or among the Hakka tin miners of Banka and Billiton.
 - d. Among the Hindus of Bali, and some of the indigenous animistic tribes of Borneo, Sumatra and other islands, which are as yet not reached by Islam, no work is being done.
 - e. The Jews and Japanese in this field, and certain Dyak tribes are as yet untouched.

2. Committee on Survey.

It is clear to the Conference that a thorough-going survey of this area should be attempted in the near future by a committee appointed for this purpose. It would probably be well for this committee to be organized in two sections, one for the Dutch East Indies, and the other for British Malaya, these sectional groups to work on similar lines, and their results to be presented together. The methods of investigation proposed by the Committee on Survey and Occupation, and the Committee on Securing Uniformity in Statistical Returns of the Continuation Committee should be followed, as far as possible, and Roman Catholic sources should be drawn upon for information regarding the degree to which the mission forces of that Communion are present in this area. This Conference appoints the following Committee on Survey:—

FOR THE BRITISH SPHERE.	FOR THE DUTCH SPHERE
Rev. W. G. Shellabear, Convener, The Bishop of Singapore, The Bishop of Labuan and Sarawak, Rev. J. A. B. Cook, W. D. Ashdown.	The Mission Consul, Convener, Rev. C. S. Buchanan, Not more than eight members to represent the Dutch So- cieties.

3. Special Difficulties.

The Conference finds that in certain sections of Malaysia animistic tribes are numerous, diversified as to languages, with the population rather thinly spread over such areas. The immigrants from India and China, representing various language groups, are also scattered widely. As a result, adequate occupation will involve a larger number both of missionaries and native workers than in the regions where the population is more compact and homogeneous.

4. Distribution of Missionary Forces.

This Conference considers that the time has clearly come when the mission forces in this area should formulate a plan looking towards a much more adequate occupation of Malaysia. Such a plan, however, must necessarily wait until the proposed survey provides the information necessary for any well-grounded procedure. In the meantime it does not appear to be advisable to make any change in the present distribution of the mission forces.

5. Responsibility of the Native Church.

The Conference finds that in the Batta country the native Church is approaching the point where it can begin to assume responsibility for certain parts of the work, and in Amboina and Minahassa practically the entire population is Christian. In most parts of the field, however, the native Churches are but recently established, and are not yet in a position to undertake responsibility for any particular section of the work, but should be encouraged to extend the work in their own neighbourhoods in connection with existing Churches.

6. Mohammedanism.

No Christian work is being done at the present time among Mohammedans on the Malay Peninsula and in Eastern Sumatra, with the single exception of the medical mission to women in Malacca. The time has come when the whole question of the evangelization of the Malays should be carefully considered. In order to stem the advance of Islam, it is very important that no time should be lost in sending missionaries both to the indigenous heathen and to Chinese and Indian immigrants.

Canton Conference

1. The Field.

Of the three provinces represented at this Conference, Kwangtung and Fukien are relatively well occupied, while Kwangsi is comparatively destitute. In Kwangtung every prefecture is more or less occupied except two, and these are within the plans of two of the strong Societies working in nearby areas.

2. Kwangtung Province.

Among the twenty-five millions of this province five hundred and ninety foreign missionaries are working through a diversity of languages and dialects, chief of which are Cantonese, Hakka, Hoklo and Hainanese. There has been a disproportionate distribution of workers in Kwangtung, due to the multiplication of Societies and the lack of co-ordination of their work. One district may be occupied by a single agency with but few missionaries, while a neighbouring district may have various agencies, whose outstation activities are especially liable to the friction that arises through overlapping. This condition is most noticeable in the river delta region. The supply of workers, Chinese and foreign, is far too small for the province as a whole even if these are most advantageously distributed. A constructive programme, combining all agencies, would do much to make the present force more nearly equal to the task.

3. Fukien Province.

This province, with an estimated population of more than twenty-two millions, speaking the Foochow, Amoy and Hinghwa dialects, and also various others akin to Mandarin, is occupied by six Societies. Fukien has a force of three hundred and eighty-nine missionaries. With one exception all the prefectures are occupied by resident foreign missionaries, and this prefecture has a force of Chinese workers connected with one of the Missions. Early in their history the three Societies working in the Amoy region divided their territory, thus securing an economic use of forces, and avoiding all haphazard effort and duplication. There is an urgent need of more workers to carry out the plans of the Missions, which have been working so effectively and unitedly for more than half a century. North Fukien has three successful mission agencies that need large reinforcements to conserve the work done and to accomplish the task to which they are committed and at which they are working in most amicable relations.

4. Neglected Classes of the Two Provinces.

One pressing problem and need in connection with both of these provinces is that of the Chinese immigrants in South-eastern Asia and the adjacent islands, who are almost wholly natives of Fukien or Kwangtung. Provision for the evangelization of these numerous and increasingly influential Chinese people and the shepherding of the converts who go from here in large numbers, rests chiefly with the Missions and Churches in China. Moreover, in both Kwangtung and Fukien there are large numbers of almost wholly neglected classes, such as 200,000 boat people in Canton and Hongkong; the rapidly increasing number of railway employees; the ricksha men; the soldiers; the prisoners in the jails; the Bannermen; the Mohammedans, and the island population along our extensive coast. These all comprise needy and inviting fields for evangelistic effort.

5. Kwangsi Province.

This province has an estimated population of eight millions, with forty-seven missionaries. Of the seventy-two walled cities only nine have resident missionaries. Of the remaining sixty-three cities, only eight have chapels in charge of Chinese evangelists. Thus fifty-five cities, with perhaps an average population of 30,000, are without regular workers, either Chinese or foreign. The above does not include over 1,200 market towns, sometimes very large and important, and over 45,000 villages scattered throughout the province, the majority of which are not within the effective influence of any mission work. The whole north-western half is still practically untouched. The country is mountainous and travel is difficult. Mention should be made of a population of over one million aborigines, among whom practically no direct Christian work has been attempted.

6. Yunnan and Kweichow Provinces.

These two provinces, adjacent to the area covered by this Conference, and coming within the purview of no other of the Continuation Committee Conferences, must be mentioned as the least occupied provinces of the Republic. Kweichow is the more destitute, with one foreign missionary to 332,000 people, and Yunnan next, with one to 326,000, not including Roman Catholics.

7. Scientific Survey Called For.

The investigations before and during the Conference, and the discussions held, clearly indicate the inadequacy of the information at present available; the complexity of the task of securing such information; and the necessity for a full knowledge of all the essential facts, if Mission Boards and the forces on the field are to plan with wisdom the effective and economic occupation of the field. To this end we agree to bring about, at the earliest possible moment, a united scientific survey of each province, which to be successful must secure the active co-operation of all the mission forces concerned. Provincial committees to initiate and carry on this survey are appointed by this Conference to enter into correspondence with like committees in other areas of China, if such are later appointed, also with the Committee on Survey and Occupation of the Continuation Committee, in order that the advantages of co-ordinated endeavour and knowledge of the best methods of research may be realized.

Shanghai Conference

1. Territorial Occupation.

In the three provinces of Chekiang, Kiangsu and Anhwei, there are numerous large districts unoccupied by foreign or Chinese missionary forces and without even a chapel or preaching place. But in many of these districts, owing to the nature of the country and to the scanty population, occupation by the foreign missionary cannot be regarded as necessary. Other districts appear to be easily accessible from fields already worked and may be left for occupation through the natural expansion of the Chinese Church. Chekiang and the part of Kiangsu south of the Yangtze are the portions of this field best staffed, though the present staff of missionaries is short of women workers and is scarcely large enough to allow for furloughs and necessary absences.

2. Unreached Mohammedans.

There are at least 297,500 Moslems in the three provinces who are practically untouched.

3. Two Groups of Missionary Forces.

The missionary forces in the three provinces fall into two groups, each with its own distinctive work, that is, the missionaries at the great centres engaged in administrative, educational, medical, literary and other work, and those occupying country stations and engaged mainly in pastoral, evangelistic and medical work. Both groups are rendering necessary service and are doing it well. But having regard to the exceptional opportunities offered by the intelligent and friendly population of the larger cities and country districts, the forces available are not being used to the best advantage.

4. The Chief Emphasis to be Placed on Evangelistic Work.

We recommend that at the present time the chief emphasis should be placed on evangelistic work. The word "evangelistic" is here used in the broadest sense, and is meant to cover widespread, carefully planned and directed preaching campaigns; united and special work in cities and for particular classes; personal work in hospitals, schools and colleges, and among the children of the Church. And we further recommend:—

- (1) That some of the best men in each Mission be set apart at once to organize and carry out this evangelistic work. The missionaries thus set apart should be free to carry on this special effort for three years at least, and even the exigencies of educational, institutional or administrative work should not be allowed to interfere with or to restrict it.

- (2) That the hearty and prayerful co-operation of the whole body of Chinese Christians be secured, special work or districts being assigned to particular Churches, and special responsibilities being shared with the Chinese pastors.

5. A Clear and Definite Plan for Occupation Needed.

There is no united plan for the missionary occupation of this area. While in many instances Missions place their new workers, as these arrive, with a view to the ultimate occupancy of the field, yet one group of Missions only, namely, those in Hangchow, assign new missionaries according to a pre-arranged plan. A clear and definite plan for the missionary occupation of the whole area is urgently needed.

6. The Chinese Church Evangelizing in Chekiang.

The Chinese Church is already taking charge of the evangelization of several districts in Chekiang.

7. Call for a Thorough, United Survey.

The information at present available is not sufficient to enable us to give a satisfactory reply to the question: "What should constitute an adequate foreign missionary force for this area?" For this, and other weighty reasons, the Conference recommends:—

- (1) That a thorough, united survey of the field should be made without delay. A model for such a survey has been supplied for Chekiang by Mr. Alexander Miller within the limits assigned, and it is urged that he be set free to make similar graphical and statistical surveys of Kiangsu and Anhwei. It is anticipated that much valuable information on the occupation of the provinces will be supplied by Dr. Cochrane's new book, "Survey of the Missionary Occupation of China."
- (2) That either in connection with the Provincial Federation Councils or with the China Mission Year-book, or with some other organization or publication, a permanent statistical bureau or sub-committee be established, and to this bureau or committee all inquiries for statistics be referred.

- (3) That the statistics of each province be carefully revised every five years, or as frequently as can be arranged, and that once in ten years there be a review of the forces on the field with the object of securing its better occupation.
- (4) That the statistics be gathered on the field and by means of specially prepared forms, the same forms to be used in all the provinces. The tentative form, headings and definitions prepared by the Continuation Committee's Special Committee on Securing Uniformity in Statistical Returns, seem to meet all requirements and to be admirably adapted to our needs in China. Moreover, it is desirable for any committee or bureau charged with this work to keep in touch with this Committee.

Tsinanfu Conference

1. Large Groups of Villages Without Christian Workers.

There is no area in the province of Shantung that is not within the plans of some Mission. Within the area regarded by the various Missions as their spheres of activity, and so recognized by other Missions, are large groups of villages in which there are no Chinese pastors or foreign missionaries and in which no regular evangelistic work is done. At the present time the data are lacking by which to chart these neglected regions with accuracy.

2. Cities Without Missionaries or Chinese Pastors.

Only one city of "fu" rank, Tungchangfu, lacks a resident foreign missionary and this city is not without a Chinese pastor. There are, however, a considerable number of large and small cities lower than "fu" rank in which there are neither Chinese pastors nor foreign missionaries at work.

3. Certain Classes Not Easily Reached.

There are certain classes not easily reached for whom special efforts will be required. Among these are the Mohammedans, scholars, officials, merchants and soldiers.

4. Receptive Attitude of Large Numbers of People.

While only one person in a thousand in Shantung is a Protestant Christian, and probably not more than one in a hundred has heard enough to understand the gospel message, nevertheless there are large numbers in all classes who, we believe, are ready favourably to consider Christianity.

5. Increase of Mission Personnel Needed.

Because of the great task that confronts the Christian Church in Shantung, we believe that a doubling of the number of missionaries and a multiplication by several fold of the Chinese evangelists would no more than meet the present needs.

6. Plans for Effective Occupation.

We urge that each Church and mission agency formulate plans for the actual occupation of the whole area for which it has made itself responsible.

7. A Scientific Survey Needed.

We call the attention of the Shantung Federation to the necessity for a careful, scientific survey of the province with respect to its occupation. We request the Federation to provide for such a survey at an early date. Such a survey we believe will make more effective our appeals to the Chinese Church and to the home base, and will make possible a larger wisdom in the placing of missionary forces.

Peking Conference

NOTE.—The present number of the administrative cities varies from the numbers given below, but this does not affect the issue.

1. Chihli.

In the province of Chihli there are (Playfair's "Cities and Towns of China," Edition of 1912) 147 administrative cities, of which all but twenty have some settled Christian work. Yet each of those cities governs several hundred market towns, villages and hamlets which are for the most part untouched. There are 250 missionaries; but of this number 146 are either in Peking or in Tungchow; the rest live in only thirteen cities. (Prefectural cities are omitted because counted as "hsiens," and because they are now being abolished.)

2. Honan.

The province of Honan, with 102 administrative cities, has 200 missionaries, of whom thirty live at Kaifengfu; six Missions, of which four are without any considerable following, are along the line of the Kaifengfu-Honanfu Railway. There are fifteen cities without settled Christian work.

3. Shansi.

Shansi, with ninety-five administrative cities, has 165 missionaries fairly well distributed over forty cities. But forty other cities have in them no regular Christian work.

4. Shensi.

The province of Shensi, with eighty-six administrative cities, has eighty-three missionaries living in twenty-one cities. Forty-nine cities, including a considerable part of the northern section of the province, are largely unoccupied.

5. Kansu.

Kansu, with sixty-two administrative cities, has forty-two missionaries in the fourteen cities. Forty-six cities are altogether unoccupied.

6. Manchuria.

The three Missions at present at work in Manchuria, namely, the Danish Lutheran, the United Free Church of Scotland and the Irish Presbyterian, in conjunction with the Mission of the Manchurian Synod of the Presbyterian Church of China, aim at making provision for the complete and effective occupation of the whole three provinces. The southern province of Shengking may now be considered fully occupied and Kirin province nearly so. A considerable beginning has already been made in the Amur province, where the Scotch and Danish Missions have each a resident station, and where there are two resident stations of the Chinese Missionary Society. While the area of the northern province is very large, twice the size of Kirin province, the population is still comparatively sparse. Statistics for Manchuria follow:—

	Resident Centres	Outstations	Missionaries
			Men	Lady	Wives
Scotch.....	8	117	22	16	16
Irish.....	9	161	16	10	14
Danish.....	10	15	19	11	12
Totals.....	27	293	57	37	42

7. Mongolia.

In Outer Mongolia there are only two missionaries, both agents of the British and Foreign Bible Society. In the three districts of Inner Mongolia, which are under the provincial governments of the northern provinces, there are no more than twelve missionaries, almost all of whom are working among Chinese immigrants.

8. Chinese Turkestan.

The vast region of Chinese Turkestan has not a single resident missionary.

9. Occupation of Cities.

We recommend that the Missions at work in the large cities use care that the forces be evenly distributed.

10. Neglected or Partly Neglected Classes.

There is a very large Mohammedan population in the provinces covered by this Conference, for special work among whom until this year no workers have been set apart. In all cities there are merchants and clerks, very few of them as yet touched by Christianity. In some cities there are great numbers of labourers, notably ricksha men, for whom in a religious way little is done. The same is true of railway employees, a large and growing class. Our attention has been called to the need of special work for those who desire to leave temples, for criminals, for subjects of rescue work, etc. The Salvation Army will be welcomed as an important agency to meet this need. Some work is already done for soldiers in camps which is capable of great expansion. So also for members of the growing police force. It is specially urged from many quarters that advantage should be taken of the present wide open door for influencing students in government schools, and also the official classes, by setting apart additional special workers for these classes. This Conference would strongly urge the claims of the great Mongol people, who, as has well been said, need everything and at present have nothing.

II. Scientific Supervision and Survey of the Field.

In view of the vastness of the territory under view, we recommend:—

- (1) That every province should organize a Provincial Council with stated meetings, which Council every Mission should be invited and urged to join.
- (2) That every Provincial Council should have a permanent advisory committee upon which every Mission as well as the Chinese Church in the province should be represented, and that all questions of occupation of the field or delimitation of territory should be adjusted in conference with this advisory committee.
- (3) That new work in the province should be opened only after friendly conference with this committee.
- (4) Every Provincial Council should arrange for a careful survey of its field, and for the preparation of a map on a scientific plan, showing the extent of the occupation of the field, and accompanied by full statistics on an approved plan. These maps and statistics should be revised at least every five years.
- (5) That a Board or Committee of Arbitration for all China be formed to which difficult questions of delimitation of mission areas may be referred by the Societies or Provincial Councils concerned.
- (6) That the Missions should plan for more scientific investigation and co-operation along lines of social reform.

- (7) This Conference asks the coming National Conference in Shanghai to arrange for a scientific survey of the whole field and to make thereafter a more definite statement of the needs of our field than is at present practicable.

Hankow Conference

1. The Principal Unoccupied Areas.

In view of the considerable number of unoccupied districts in this area, we strongly recommend that the matter be carefully considered by Federation Councils with a view to effective occupation. The principal unoccupied sections are:—

- (1) The southwestern part of Hupeh.
- (2) The southern and western parts of Hunan.
- (3) The southern, north-eastern and north-western parts of Kiangsi.
- (4) The western portion of Szechwan and regions south of the Yangtze in that province.

2. Advantageous Use of Present Forces.

In our opinion the present forces are, for the most part, being used to the best advantage, though the tendency to open places near and convenient, instead of more distant but strategic, needs perhaps to be guarded against. We rejoice in the comparative freedom from overlapping.

3. Training Chinese for Evangelistic Work.

Considering the great openings at present among all classes, we feel that the Church should lay special emphasis on evangelistic work, and on the training of Chinese for such work. We would add that importance should be attached to primary schools, from the standpoint of this evangelistic work.

4. A Definite Plan for Occupation Urgently Needed.

With regard to missionary occupation, much has been done in the way of division and actual transfer of territory in Hunan and Hupei. Both these provinces have already organized Federation Councils. In Szechwan an Advisory Board has been in existence for years, working with striking success. Kiangsi has so far had no Federation Council, but it is hoped soon to organize one. Notwithstanding encouraging features, a clear and definite plan for the occupation of the whole area, similar to the one in operation in West China for that district, is urgently needed.

5. Laying Increased Responsibility on the Chinese Church.

We rejoice in the growth and development of the Chinese Church and would suggest that increasing responsibility for aggressive evangelistic work be placed upon it. We rejoice that such a movement as the Student Volunteer Movement for the Ministry is developing in China, and we hope there may soon arise movements similar to the Laymen's Missionary Movement of the West, in order that these may result in the effective occupation of hitherto unreached fields.

6. Large Reinforcements Needed.

The question as to what should constitute an adequate foreign missionary force for this area, it is impossible to answer definitely until a general survey of the field can be made; but in any case, large reinforcements of foreign workers are urgently needed by every department of the work.

7. A Scientific Survey Desirable.

We consider it desirable to make a scientific and thorough survey of the area under consideration as early as possible, and that maps be prepared on similar lines to that of Chekiang made by Mr. Alexander Miller. We fully recognize the importance of a periodical review of the field, and would urge the adoption of some standard system of statistical forms.

8. Various Forms of Christian Philanthropy.

The Conference expresses the opinion that an adequate occupation of the field requires the various forms of Christian philanthropy, such as asylums for the insane and the deaf and dumb, homes for incurables and foundlings, and college settlements.

China National Conference

1. China as a Republic.

Thus far the most striking event of the twentieth century is unquestionably the swift change by which the most ancient of empires has adopted a republican form of government. Whatever may be our forecast of the future of China, it is evident that, as related to the work of the evangelization of this land, the step which has been taken is one of transcendent importance.

2. Vastness of the Work and Urgency of the Need.

In studying the reports of the five Sectional Conferences held in widely separated parts of China, while recognizing what great things God has wrought, this Conference is profoundly impressed with the vastness of the work which remains to be done, the urgency of the need and the wide-open doors. After a century of waiting and praying we have now in China almost complete religious liberty. All ranks of society are at present accessible, more especially the student class, who are to be the makers of the China that is to be. It is the object of this report to summarize, as briefly as may be, existing conditions in the missionary occupation of China and to point out what steps should be taken in reference to them.

3. Neglected Regions.

In the absence of a scientific survey of the whole of China it is not possible to give exact information as to the occupation of the entire field; it is clear, however, that while coast cities and districts easily accessible by river or rail are for the most part occupied, the same cannot be said of the less accessible regions. The provinces of Yunnan, Kwangsi, Kweichow and Kansu—stated in order of their need—are largely unoccupied, and offer extensive spheres for Missions wishing to undertake work in a new field in China. The neglected condition of these vast regions is indeed deplorable. Smaller unoccupied and unevangelized areas are to be found in districts in the south-west of Hupeh; in the north-east, north-west and south-east of Kiangsi; in portions of Anhwei; in the west of Honan; in northern Shensi; and among the tribes in the extreme west and south-west of Szechwan.

4. A Strong Call for New Effort.

The condition of the above-mentioned provinces and districts forms a strong call to the whole Christian Church for new effort. There is also urgent need for the more thorough evangelization of the provinces and districts already occupied, but this may be accomplished by the natural growth of the Chinese Church and the strengthening of the existing missionary forces.

5. Outlying Territories.

With reference to the outlying territories: Mongolia is a special and a difficult field; a few missionaries are working among the Chinese immigrants, and two or three men are devoting themselves to the Mongols proper, but with the exception of the one representative of the British and Foreign Bible Society the entire region of Outer Mongolia and the greater part of Inner Mongolia are without missionaries. Chinese Turkestan also presents exceptional difficulties, and demands on the part of workers special physique and linguistic gifts. The territory is vast and the population sparse. Only three centres are occupied and two of these are in the extreme west. The province of Sinkiang has at present only one missionary. Five or six Missions have for years been working both on the Indian and on the Chinese frontiers, waiting for the opening of Tibet. Their members have already a knowledge of the language. The normal expansion of these Missions will naturally provide a sufficient force for the occupation of this country at least during the early stages of work.

6. Survey of the Field.

A thorough survey of the whole field should be made and maps published showing districts evangelized, Churches, number of missionaries and Chinese workers, and approximate number of converts, also schools and colleges, hospitals and philanthropic institutions. Also, this work should be entrusted to the permanent committee to be appointed by this Conference and the survey should be revised periodically.

NOTE.—The valuable information contained in Dr. Thomas Cochrane's recently published volume, "Survey of the Missionary Occupation of China," should be utilized in making such a survey.

7. Mission Comity.

In view of the areas yet to be evangelized, Missions entering upon already occupied districts should first consult the Mission already in the field and the Federation Council or similar organization of the province or district and give due consideration to the recommendations made.

8. Opening Up New Fields.

In opening work in fields which are at present unoccupied the Missionary Societies should consult with one another; and regard should be had to the need for men of special qualifications for particular fields and also to the possibility of the work being accomplished by Chinese rather than by foreign agency.

9. Direct Evangelistic Work.

At the present time great emphasis should be placed upon direct evangelistic work and care should be taken to secure that all areas, both in city and in country, and also all classes of the community, be effectively evangelized.

10. Work Among Moslems.

Attention is drawn to the great need of work among Moslems and the Conference recommends that specially equipped men and women be appointed to that work.

11. The Present Missionary Staff Hopelessly Inadequate.

In order to ensure any occupation of the field which shall be worthy of the name every arm of missionary service should be at once heavily reinforced. Our greatest task is to train up the Chinese men and women who are to be the Christian leaders of China, and for this purpose the present missionary staff is hopelessly inadequate. Mission stations and mission institutions which are habitually undermanned cannot meet the emergency in China today.

12. Informing the Churches of Europe and America.

Since this emergency, as exhibited in the findings of this National Conference, is in itself a call to the Christian Churches in Europe and America, steps should be taken to bring to their knowledge the great task laid upon us by the providence of God.

13. A Call to Prayer.

We are constrained to reaffirm the opinion expressed by one of the Commissions at Edinburgh, that at the present time pressing problems and great opportunities are simultaneously thrust upon the Christian Church as never before in the entire history of Christianity. Yet a large portion of the Christian Church remains apparently unimpressed by the stupendous changes in the Far East as if immune to any call of duty or of privilege. Until the Church is aroused the world cannot be evangelized. There is a call for united and unceasing intercession that all Christendom may be stirred to unwearied efforts in order that all China shall hear the Gospel, known as yet to comparatively few of her sons and daughters, so that the vision of the ancient prophet may be fulfilled and amplified, and that we may win for Christ not merely "these from the land of Sinim" but the whole of her population.

Moukden Conference

1. Provincial Map and City Surveys.

A missionary map of Manchuria should be prepared indicating the distribution of population, races and religions; also the location of Churches, hospitals, schools and other Christian institutions. Moreover, surveys of the larger cities should be made for the purpose of making possible more systematic plans of evangelization.

2. Reaching Korean Immigrants.

The Church in Manchuria should consult with the American and Canadian Presbyterian Churches and with other Missions in Korea as to the evangelization of Koreans coming into Manchuria.

3. Policy Regarding Unevangelized Regions.

The Manchurian Church should form some definite policy with reference to its unevangelized regions, such as Mishanfu, Changpaifu, and the Mongolian border.

Seoul Conference

1. Special Needs of Students and of Japanese Immigrants.

The foreign missionary forces are fairly spread over the whole field, and the needs of the various classes of the population are fairly met. Among special needs, however, attention ought to be drawn to the growing numbers of the student class, owing to the gradual spread of a system of government education throughout the country, and also to the special claims of the Japanese immigrants, who now number nearly a quarter of a million.

2. Institutional Versus Evangelistic Work.

To secure a proper use of the foreign missionary forces to the best advantage, it is eminently desirable that the various Missions should come to some conclusion as to the respective (and often competing) claims of institutional and evangelistic work, to avoid a disproportion which involves waste of force.

3. Effective Rather Than Presumptive Occupation.

It should be regarded as obligatory on each Mission which has assumed responsibility for a given area, not only to have a well-considered plan for the adequate manning of its territory, but also to see to it that sufficient men and money are forthcoming to enable this plan to be effectually carried out. This has happily already been done by the Southern Presbyterians in Chol-la-do, and is in a fair way to be accomplished by the Australian Presbyterian Mission.

4. Sunday School Work.

A progressive movement in Sunday school work is urgently asked for.

5. Foreign Missionaries Still Needed.

A large measure of autonomy has been already attained by the Korean Churches under Presbyterian and Methodist guidance, but the time for the complete elimination of the foreign missionary element has not yet arrived.

6. Additional Foreign Workers Required.

The total number of additional workers reported as required by the Missions belonging to the Federal Council, that is, Presbyterian and Methodist, amounts to thirty-five men and thirty-three women workers. We would call the attention of the home Church to the fact that this moderate increase is urgently asked for, not merely for the opening of new work, but even more to enable those already on the field to discharge their duties uninterruptedly and with greater efficiency.

7. Scientific Survey Called For.

It would be of great value to undertake in the not distant future a thorough survey of the whole field, based on the new government geographical survey of the country, and to arrange that periodical reviews of the field should be undertaken every five or six years, rather than at such long intervals as every ten years.

Tokyo Conference of Missionaries

1. The Unreached Millions of Japanese.

A careful and most painstaking survey of the whole country conducted by the Committee on the Distribution of Forces, specially appointed by the Conference of Federated Missions, brings to our attention anew the vast unoccupied territory in Japan. Approximately 80 per cent. of the total population, or above forty millions, reside in rural communities, of which number, so far as our data indicate, 96 per cent. constitute an entirely unworked field. Of the remaining 20 per cent. of the total population, residing in cities and towns, about one-fifth is still unprovided for; thus giving us the result that above 80 per cent. of the population of Japan are not being directly reached by the evangelistic forces. Even in the cities and towns which are occupied, a comparatively small portion of the people have been in any real sense evangelized. A gigantic and yet most inspiring task, therefore, still lies before us in the Christian conquest of Japan.

2. The Call for Reinforcements.

The need thus clearly revealed cries loudly to the Church of Christ for reinforcements. The call comes first of all for a larger number of Japanese workers, and therefore for the funds necessary to prepare and to support them. Four times the present number will be required to put in the field one Japanese evangelistic worker to approximately 10,000 people. The support of these additional workers for the present at least must come largely from Christians in Europe and America. There is strong unanimity on the part of the Christian forces in Japan that a large increase in appropriations to render possible this fuller Japanese occupation of the field, and to equip the whole work properly, is the first need to be met. Following the appeal for additional Japanese workers and the funds for their support and for equipment, comes the call for missionary reinforcements. Of the twelve district conferences, into which the whole country was divided for the purposes of the survey above indicated, nine have reported their needs to be 356 additional evangelistic missionaries (those who devote two-thirds or more of their time to direct evangelistic work), including wives. If the remaining three districts which have yet to be heard from present needs in equal proportion, there will be required in the near future 474 additional evangelistic missionaries in order adequately to occupy the field. This means a little more than doubling the present evangelistic missionary force, and will provide approximately one missionary to 60,000 of the population. It is to be noted that this conclusion is not merely the judgment of a small investigating committee, but indicates the conviction of a considerable part of the missionary body as expressed through the local conferences. Moreover, these figures have, in the main, the approval of several of the corresponding Japanese local conferences.

3. Where the New Missionaries Should be Located.

There is substantial unanimity both on the part of the missionary body and of those Japanese leaders who have expressed themselves, that this increment of missionaries, if provided, should be located largely in the small cities or in the larger towns, with a view to devoting themselves principally to the rural work. However, a number of specially equipped missionaries for various forms of special service would find a welcome and large opportunities for usefulness in the greater cities.

4. Co-operation in the Plan for Fuller Occupation.

In order best to co-ordinate the whole work of occupation, and to secure the most effective distribution of the Christian forces, it is vitally necessary that the closest co-operation should be maintained between the different bodies in planning their work. To this end it is earnestly recommended that the existing Japanese and missionary national and local Committees on the Distribution of Forces should be made permanent and the whole campaign of fuller occupation be carried on under their general counsel and guidance.

5. More Advantageous Use of Present Forces.

With a view to a more advantageous use of the present missionary forces, we would suggest the following points:—

- (1) Combination wherever possible in educational and other forms of work, in order to release as many missionaries as possible for direct evangelistic work.
- (2) Provision of ample clerical assistance for missionaries of experience, the nature of whose work requires it, in order that valuable time and strength may be conserved for the highest uses.
- (3) Provision of qualified agents for financial and business administration, so that evangelistic workers may become an untrammelled spiritual force.

6. The Work in Formosa.

We would call attention, with reference to the work in Formosa:—

- (1) To the need for better facilities for educational work for the Formosans.
- (2) To the need for Young Men's Christian Association equipment and workers for both the Formosans and the Japanese.
- (3) To the existence of 121,000 aborigines ("head hunters"), only a small fraction of whom have as yet submitted to the Japanese Government, and who are totally destitute as regards any opportunity of hearing the Gospel.

Tokyo Conference of Japanese Leaders

1. Japan Continuation Committee.

We are unable to say that the present missionary force in Japan, considering its numbers and the financial expenditure in connection with it, is used to the best efficiency. The principal reasons for this are the divisions into many denominations and the non-existence of a definite and comprehensive missionary policy looking towards the long future and the whole Empire. Not a few of the missionaries have no clear consciousness of their particular mission and their position in the missionary work of the country. There is frequently a lack of adjustment between workers and work. We therefore recommend that a committee be organized after the pattern of the Edinburgh Continuation Committee, to undertake the same kind of responsibility and work as that Committee, that is, to confer on missionary policy, the proper distribution of forces and like important subjects.

2. Co-operation and Union in Educational and Other Work.

We recommend that steps be taken to bring about more co-operation and union in the educational, social and other work of the missionaries, as far as possible combining the personnel and capital at present used separately.

3. The Missionaries Co-labourers with the Japanese.

Foreign missionaries should always keep the spirit of co-labourers with the Japanese workers.

4. Distribution of the Missionary Force.

Something should be done for the more even distribution of the missionary force in all parts of the Empire.

5. Reinforcements Needed.

The responsibility of the Japanese workers for the evangelization of Japan should be more fully recognized, and with that idea more Japanese workers should be trained for the work. At the same time there is need of an increase of the missionary force above the present numbers, and for the following reasons:—

- (1) To secure those who have special qualifications for tasks that cannot at present be undertaken by Japanese.
- (2) To provide missionary workers to undertake pioneer evangelization in places where there are at present no resident missionaries.

Japan National Conference

I. Facts Revealed by the Survey of Occupation.

A careful and most painstaking survey* of the whole country, conducted by the Committee on the Distribution of Forces, specially appointed by the Conference of Federated Missions, brings to our attention anew the vast unoccupied territory in Japan. Approximately 80 per cent. of the total population, or above forty millions, reside in rural districts, of which number, so far as our data indicate, 96 per cent. constitute an entirely unworked field. Of the remaining 20 per cent. of the total population, residing in cities and towns, about one-fifth is still unprovided for; thus giving us the result that above 80 per cent. of the population of Japan are not being directly reached by the evangelistic forces. Even in the cities and towns which are occupied, a comparatively small portion of the people have been in any real sense evangelized. A gigantic and yet most inspiring task, therefore, still lies before us in the Christianization of Japan, which calls first of all for renewed humiliation, deeper consecration and a larger life.

*This survey did not include Saghalien, Formosa or Korea.

2. Reinforcements Needed.

The need thus clearly revealed demands reinforcements.

- (1) As Japan must be evangelized largely by the Japanese, the demand comes first of all for a larger number of Japanese workers, and for the full equipment and support of the institutions which prepare them. Four times the present number will be required to put in the field one Japanese evangelistic worker to approximately 10,000 people. There is strong unanimity on the part of the Christian forces in Japan that a large increase in funds to render possible this fuller Japanese occupation of the field, and to equip the whole work properly, is the first need to be met.
- (2) We would emphasize the need also of an increase of the missionary force for cities and towns inadequately occupied or wholly unoccupied by missionaries. Moreover, a number of missionaries adapted for various forms of special service would find a welcome and large opportunities for usefulness in the greater cities.*
- (3) That such material increase may become truly effectual in the work of God we call upon the whole Christian Church in all lands to unite in most earnest intercession for the special blessing and guidance of the Holy Spirit.

3. A Definite and Comprehensive Policy Needed.

In order best to co-ordinate the whole work of occupation, and to secure the most effective distribution of the Christian forces, there is need of a definite and comprehensive policy looking towards the long future and the whole Empire. Steps should be taken to bring about more co-operation and union in educational and other forms of work wherever possible in the interest of a fuller occupation of the field, and the closest co-operation should be maintained between the different bodies in planning their evangelistic work. A careful consideration of the whole matter is suggested to the Continuation Committee of Japan.

*The question of the number of reinforcements needed, both Japanese and missionary, is still under investigation by the Committees on Distribution of Forces appointed by the Conference of Federated Missions and the Federation of Churches, respectively, whose final report may be expected later. As an indication of the trend of the investigation it may be said that of the twelve district missionary conferences, into which the whole country was divided for the purposes of the survey above indicated, nine have reported their needs to be 356 additional missionaries for the direct evangelistic work. If the remaining three districts, which are yet to be heard from, present needs in equal proportion, there will be required in the near future 474 additional missionaries in order adequately to occupy the evangelistic field. This means a little more than doubling the present evangelistic force, and will provide approximately one such missionary to 60,000 of the population.

4. Work for Japanese in Korea and Manchuria.

Attention should be called to the need of work for Japanese in Korea and Manchuria who number about 300,000 and constitute a rapidly increasing element in the population. There are unusually great openings for Christian activity among these Japanese, and because of separation from former home relationships they are especially susceptible to approach through social service.

5. Formosa.

We would call attention, with reference to the work in Formosa:—

- (1) To the need for better facilities for educational work for Formosans.
- (2) To the need for Young Men's Christian Association equipment and workers for both the Formosans and the Japanese.
- (3) To the existence of 121,000 savage aborigines, only a small fraction of whom have as yet submitted to the Japanese Government, and who are totally destitute as regards any opportunity of hearing the Gospel. We would particularly lay this need upon the hearts of the Christian forces now at work in Formosa, and suggest that the Continuation Committee of Japan be willing to assume the responsibility of co-operating with the Christian forces in Formosa with a view to taking steps towards the evangelization of these aborigines.

EVANGELIZATION

II. EVANGELIZATION

According to India's Census of 1911, it had a Christian population of 3,876,196 out of a total of 313,523,981 who gave their religious preferences. This includes also the Roman Catholics and branches of the old Syrian Church. Ten per cent. of the inhabitants of Ceylon belong to a similar Christian community. One person in eighty-two dwelling in the Dutch East Indies calls himself a Christian. Taking the "Statesman's Year-book, 1913" as authority for total population, China had among its 407,253,029 inhabitants a Protestant community of 370,114,—according to the "China Mission Year Book, 1913,"—one person in 1,100. In Korea the Protestant community numbers 179,167 of whom 68,195 are communicants, or one communicant to 197 of the population. Japan's total Protestant membership is 90,469, the "Christian Movement in Japan, 1913" informs us,—or one to 577 Japanese.

Such figures surely justify the note of urgency found on every page of this chapter. While the fifty millions of India's depressed and aboriginal populations are extraordinarily open to the Gospel, all of Hinduism's 217,586,920 votaries are deeply religious and hence are a prepared field for the true Seed; China's four hundred millions were never so favourably inclined towards the Gospel as to-day; Koreans showed their eagerness to come into the Kingdom in their experience of sore distress, visited upon leading Christians, by adding last year to the list of baptised 11,700 new names; and conservative Japan so feels the need of the evangelistic emphasis that in April last the leaders there called for 474 additional missionaries for evangelistic work alone.

All the Conferences not only ask for reinforcements from home-base centres, but they also insist upon the larger participation in this work by the Churches of these fields through men and women trained for special and ordinary evangelistic effort. When once the indigenus Church has tasted the joy of saving souls, its members will gladly enter special classes for training the rank and file of the membership; its better educated leaders will perfect themselves in the divine art of "fishers of men"; and its strong pastors and Bible women having the gift in its fulness will join similarly endowed missionaries in fraternal evangelistic campaigns, thus ushering in the era of revivals on mission fields.

The evangelistic approach and method will vary and will also change with the conditions. In rudely awakened Peking, "the reiteration of trite and commonplace expositions and exhortations by men of insufficient training must give place to a more virile type of preaching by the best men available," for the reason that it suddenly stands before the world as the capital of its most populous republic. Bangalore will give Indian theological students a thorough knowledge of the language, literature, religion and life of the people to be evangelized, a preparation that seems desirable only for the missionary at first blush. Sunday school work, special lectures, the distribution of suitable literature, advertising in the public press according to the plan of Mr. Pieters in Japan, Young Men's Christian Association methods adapted to church use, united evangelistic campaigns at great pilgrim centres, utilization of museums as Mr. White-wright has done at Tsinanfu, and an increasing use of Jesus' wellside method with one person for an insignificant but potential audience, are suggestions of what is in prospect in the countries under consideration.

But what is the objective? Not a convert initiated into all the subtle niceties of Occidental theology, to be received into comfortable Churches as a self-satisfied guest. "Emphasis should be laid on repentance and faith as the condition of baptism," said the Singapore Conference, "and on the work of evangelizing their neighbours as the duty and privilege of church members." How a sense of responsibility and of missionary zeal is to be developed the Lahore Conference admirably suggests in eight specifications. "Paid workers should not be employed to do work which Christians can and ought to do voluntarily," Madras wisely declares. All agree with Allahabad that every inhabitant of these populous countries has the right to such a hearing of the Gospel as will make possible an intelligent faith in Christ and an acceptance of Him as a personal Saviour.

Colombo Conference

1. Direct Evangelistic Work.

This conference records its conviction that much more direct evangelistic work among non-Christians needs to be done. Official returns show that 90 per cent of the entire population of Ceylon is still non-Christian. The Conference further recommends that a serious attempt should be made to a better understanding of the religious standpoint of the people.

2. The Task of Every Church Member.

This Conference is of opinion that there is a very widespread feeling throughout the Church in Ceylon that the work of evangelization may be delegated to its paid agents, and that in consequence of this the contagious enthusiasm of Christian service is not sufficiently evident to the non-Christian peoples of this country. This Conference, therefore, recommends that preachers and teachers lay special stress by precept and example upon the truth that the task of the evangelization of this country is the task of every member of the Church.

Madras Conference

1. Definition.

While all forms of mission work are really effective only in so far as they are evangelizing agencies, these findings are concerned with the direct proclamation of the Gospel by word of mouth, whether to groups or to individuals.

2. Willing Hearers.

The Conference holds that while every effort should be made to secure that all classes shall have a fair and full opportunity of hearing and understanding the Gospel, at the same time great emphasis in evangelistic work should be placed on the importance of bringing the Gospel to those people who show willingness to receive its message.

3. Voluntary Evangelistic Endeavours.

The Conference considers that evangelization has suffered much in the past from being regarded as the professional business of Indian paid workers whose task is the delivery of addresses. It is of primary importance that evangelistic activity should be regarded as the normal expression of the spiritual life of every Christian. Paid workers should not be employed to do work which Christians can and ought to do voluntarily.

4. Workers who Possess Genuine Spiritual Life.

Where paid workers are necessary they should be men or women known to possess genuine spiritual life. It is much better to leave this work undone than to employ unspiritual agents for it.

5. Training of Workers.

Paid workers should have special preparation and training which would enable them to secure a thorough knowledge of the language, literature, religion and life of the people to be evangelized. The same need of training applies with special force to foreign missionaries for whom hitherto time has not generally been allowed for the acquisition of such a thorough knowledge of the vernacular literature as this work requires.

6. Co-operative Endeavour in Evangelization.

The Conference recommends that trained European or Indian missionaries with special gifts should be set apart for the work of evangelization and should be placed at the head of groups of evangelists who may be drawn, where possible, from different Missions working in the same language area. It is important that in addition to preaching, all evangelists should also have direct personal work with individuals and should be able to prepare converts for baptism. Besides the ordinary methods of street preaching, conversations, distribution of literature, and house-to-house visitation, the Conference recommends the method of concentrated attacks on particular towns or villages. Such attacks in the case of large cities should be undertaken by the combined efforts of all denominations, carefully prepared for by earnest prayer and wise organization, and then vigorously followed up.

Bombay Conference

1. Urgent Need of Great Expansion.

Throughout the discussion under the head of evangelization the urgent need of a great expansion of this work was felt to press upon the hearts of all the members of the Conference, and testimony was borne by all the speakers to the paramount claims of this department of missionary activity, especially at a time when there is among great masses of the people an increased willingness to listen to the message of the Gospel.

2. Instruction of Converts.

It is of the utmost importance to the Church that adequate instruction be given to converts before their admission by baptism into the Christian Church.

3. Gatherings for Fellowship and Instruction.

For the upbuilding of the Church in holiness and fitness for Christian service it is recommended that more should be done to bring Christians together for fellowship and for instruction in matters pertaining to the kingdom of God by means of the mela, sabha, or other form of Christian gathering.

4. Giving Responsibility to Indian Christians.

More responsibility for the superintendence of evangelistic work and for its finance should be given to Indian Christians, in order that they may take a larger part in the evangelization of their country.

5. Economic Improvement of Outcastes.

In view of the social helplessness of large groups of converts from the outcaste sections of Hindus, and in view of the hindrance which this condition presents to the natural expansion of evangelistic effort, more should be done for the economic improvement of these classes, for example, by means of the development of industries and the establishment of co-operative banks, especially among those who are dependent upon agriculture for their maintenance. Such efforts for the elevation of the masses of the people will place them in a position to take their appropriate share in the great work of the evangelization of India.

Jubbulpore Conference

1. Aggressive Evangelism.

More emphasis should be laid on aggressive evangelism, both by missionaries and by Indian agents, particularly with reference to the nearly 80,000 villages of our field.

2. Co-operation.

With a view to more co-operation in evangelism, occasional united campaigns should be arranged in different centres.

3. Special Evangelistic Workers.

Men of strong evangelistic gifts should be sought out and trained for the work of evangelization.

4. Reaching the Educated Classes.

Special effort should be made to reach the educated classes.

5. Mohammedans.

Special attention should be given to the evangelization of the nearly one million Mohammedans in the area, and where they are to be found in any considerable numbers, the Missions concerned should be urged to make special provision for this work by setting apart some person or persons to make a thorough study of the Mohammedan problem.

6. Aborigines.

Special efforts should be made to reach the many aborigines of this area because of their openness to Christian influence, and because of the danger of their becoming absorbed into the Hindu social system.

7. Correlation.

The evangelistic work carried on by men should be more closely correlated with that carried on by women, and the evangelistic work should be more closely correlated with other forms of mission work.

8. Prayer.

A season of united intercession for evangelization should be observed annually by the Missions of this field.

9. Cultivation of the Missionary Spirit.

The missionary cause should be continually presented before our Anglo-Indian and Indian congregations.

Allahabad Conference

1. Evangelistic Needs.

This Conference recognizes the right of every person in India to such a hearing of the Gospel as will make possible an intelligent faith in Christ and an acceptance of Him as a personal Saviour. We therefore request:—

- (1) An adequate increase in the force of missionaries.
- (2) A large development of Indian workers of all grades.
- (3) The encouragement of the laity to assist in evangelizing the people.

2. Qualifications of Workers.

We recognize that the chief element in successful evangelistic work is not so much the method employed as the personality and spiritual qualifications of the worker.

3. Primary Schools.

In view of the evangelistic usefulness of village and mohalla schools, and of the present widespread demand and facilities for the extension of primary education in India, we urge that the use of such schools be made an increasingly prominent part of missionary advance.

4. Seasons of Special Effort.

In addition to ordinary methods we recommend that seasons of special effort be observed both among inquirers and among those not yet acquainted with the Gospel.

5. What Constitutes Evangelization.

We can recognize that tract of territory to have been evangelized only where the mass of the people have had the Gospel presented to them in such manner, and for such time, as to have afforded an adequate opportunity for its intelligent comprehension and acceptance.

6. The Mass Movement a Passing Opportunity.

In view of the present accessibility of the depressed classes and the aggressive activity of definitely antichristian agencies, more vigorous efforts be made to win these classes to Christ, before the passing of the opportunity.

7. More Missionaries Needed for the Mass Movement.

We recommend to the various Mission Boards the urgent need of increasing the force of missionaries—men and women—for work in the mass movement.

8. Co-operation.

We recognize the urgent need of co-operation among missionaries working the same areas, to prevent overlapping, to maintain discipline, and to make possible, where desirable and practicable, the transfer of Church members from one Mission to another.

9. Leaders for Work Among the Depressed Classes.

We emphasize the need of training the most promising converts from the depressed classes (men and women) to evangelize their own people, the training and employment of "chaudharis" (heads of village communities) as unpaid spiritual leaders, and the need of impressing on all Christians their duty to teach and to win their people to Christ.

Lahore Conference

1. Growth of the Christian Community.

We acknowledge with thankfulness to God the phenomenal growth of the Christian community in this area and recognize its unquestioned importance as the most promising evangelizing agency.

2. Developing a Sense of Responsibility.

For the development of a sense of responsibility and of missionary zeal on the part of this Christian community we recommend that:—

- (1) Special care be given to the training of children
- (2) More careful training in essentials be given to converts.
- (3) The value of the Sunday school and other agencies working for the youth of the Church be emphasized.
- (4) Work among women be carried on pari passu with that among their men folk.
- (5) Greater emphasis be placed upon the necessity of the preacher being also a teacher.
- (6) The lay element in congregations be more fully utilized.
- (7) Workers (both Indian and foreign) be set apart as evangelists for specific work of extended itineration.

- (8) Indigenous methods be used to the greatest possible extent; for example, the Gospel should be sung in verse and recited at melas.

3. Requirements for Baptism.

On the question of requirements for baptism, we recommend that owing to wide diversity of practice in our Missionary Societies, a serious attempt be made to have greater uniformity of conditions required of candidates for baptism, the outlining of these conditions to be placed in the hands of a responsible committee, appointed by the Federal Council.

4. The Message to be Preached.

Regarding the Evangel, resolved that we preach Christ as the only Saviour of men, and that we proclaim the Bible as the Word of the living God inspired by the Holy Ghost.

5. Accessibility of Certain Depressed Classes.

This Conference views the proved accessibility of certain depressed classes and recognizes that the accessions to the Christian Church have been almost entirely from such castes where converts have come, not as individuals, but as families and even as whole sections of villages. For example, in the Sialkot District about two-thirds, namely, 37,000, of one particular caste have adopted Christianity.

6. Meeting the Mass Movement Situation.

In view of these facts as well as of the strenuous efforts on the part of Hindus and Mohammedans to reclaim the depressed classes, this Conference recommends that:—

- (1) The present opportunity of reaching the masses be emphasized as a critical one and that it be redeemed to the fullest extent.
- (2) Christian village communities be organized and that some familiar system be extensively used for discipline.
- (3) Great stress be laid on the necessity of all evangelistic workers making definite time and opportunity to tour the villages frequently in order to come into personal contact with the masses who are pressing into the Church.

- (4) A social survey of these classes be made by an expert appointed by the Federal Council

Calcutta Conference

1. The Spirit of Evangelism.

There is urgent need for the development in every possible way of the true spirit of evangelism in all departments of Church and of missionary activity.

2. Personal Work for Individuals.

While the old emphasis laid upon village and bazaar preaching must be fully maintained, there is growing need to stimulate and foster personal work on the part of individuals for individuals in home, public and student life, and in all forms of evangelistic effort.

3. Association of Indian Workers with Missionaries.

While the chief emphasis in mission work must be placed on the teaching, training and inspiring of the members of the Indian Church to take their part in the various spheres of Christian activity, an integral part of such training must be the association of such members with the missionaries themselves in active, personal, evangelistic work, on the pattern given to us by our Lord with His disciples.

4. Laying Greater Responsibility on Indian Women.

The time has come when greater responsibility may wisely and safely be laid upon Indian women in the evangelization of this area.

5. Joint Evangelistic Campaigns.

In view of the impressive success of such methods in Japan, campaigns involving combined and concentrated effort might well be inaugurated, under God's guidance, for the conversion of non-Christians, and such campaigns, if entered upon, must be preceded by the most intense preparation, and must be followed by the careful conservation of results.

6. Discovery of Workers Having the Evangelistic Gift.

Earnest efforts should be made to discover Christian workers who possess in a marked degree the spiritual gift of winning men to immediate and fruitful decision, and such men should be set apart, so far as practicable, to serve all Societies in this area.

India National Conference

1. The Opportunity.

The widespread movements towards Christianity among the depressed classes of Hindu society and among many of the aboriginal tribes during the last fifty years have recently assumed greater proportions and have thus opened a great door of opportunity for the Christian Church. There are about fifty million of these people; and the experience of the past has shown that in many parts of India they are extraordinarily open to the message of the Gospel, forming a field white to the harvest. There are also many indications that the movements among these classes are spreading to the caste people. Indeed in some parts of India these movements have already begun.

2. The Urgency of the Crisis.

Where such conditions exist, the claim upon the Missionary Societies and the Indian Church together in this vast harvest is urgent and imperative. It is doubtful how long the door will remain open. Strong influences are at work tending to close it. The Christian forces ought to press through it with all their might while it is still open.

3. Results already Visible.

One of the most striking features of these movements is the moral and spiritual results achieved. Even where the converts have come from the lowest and most degraded section of society, already, within the short space of fifty years, large numbers of them have exhibited to a very remarkable degree the fruits of the Spirit and have by their Christian lives won the respect of those who formerly despised them and treated them as untouchable.

4. Significance for the Kingdom.

These mass movements, if properly dealt with, will be of untold value to the cause of Christ in India. The work among these classes is dealing a powerful blow at the caste spirit, which in some parts of the Church has had so fatal an influence in paralyzing its missionary spirit, and also is a great witness to that law of God's Kingdom by which He chooses the weak to confound the strong, and the things that are not to bring to nought the things that are. It is a remarkable fact that wherever in the village districts the work among the depressed classes has been most successful, there the caste people have been most ready to hear and accept the message of the Gospel. It is noticeable, too, that no part of the Church's work in India excites more concern and emulation among many sections of the educated classes. This in itself is a strong testimony to the influence of this work as a witness to the true nature and power of Christianity.

5. Greatness of the Task.

The task before us is gigantic. We desire to impress upon the Church in India and at home the imperative need of grappling with it in earnest. To gather in this harvest, and to train and educate the converts, demand a far stronger and more widespread effort than has yet been made.

6. Desiderata.

This Conference holds that any such effort to be adequate must provide for:—

- (1) Such a body of trained teachers as will not only meet immediate needs, but also will enable us to deal with large accessions in the near future.
- (2) A body of clergy, in whose training every care is taken to secure a high standard of knowledge and spiritual life.
- (3) A careful preparation of candidates for baptism.
- (4) The speedy organization of congregations.
- (5) A wise and carefully thought-out system for training in knowledge and worship such congregations as are largely composed of illiterate adults.
- (6) A method of discipline under which action proceeds from the people themselves and expresses the conscience of the Christian community.
- (7) An adequate system of village schools which will enable the people to read the Bible and to join intelligently in public worship, and at the same time will not unfit the children for their future occupations.

- (8) Medical aid in village districts, not only as an act of Christian love and compassion, but also as the only alternative to the superstitions that are inseparably connected with the native methods of treating disease.
- (9) An organized effort for the social and economic improvement of the Christian community, including especially schemes based on the co-operative principle, which are best adapted for this end, as they avoid pauperizing the people and are in themselves a moral education.

Rangoon Conference

1. Relative Numerical Increase of Converts and Workers.

In the opinion of this Conference, the number of converts gained year by year, as well as the total number of native Christians, has (speaking generally) kept pace relatively with the increase in the number of native Christian workers; and in the case of the animistic races, there has been a marked increase in the number of conversions.

2. Requirements for Baptism.

Repentance from dead works and faith towards our Lord Jesus Christ are the only essential requirements of baptism; and all bodies demand what they deem to be satisfactory evidence of the same. There is a difference of practice among the various Missions as to generally requiring a definite period of probation before baptism.

3. Direct Evangelization Emphasized.

While this Conference recognizes the value of mission schools as an evangelizing power, it feels that greater emphasis should be laid on the direct presentation of the Gospel to the unevangelized masses of the people, through both missionary and native workers, both male and female.

4. Evangelistic Tours Under Missionary Leadership.

The custom of urging students and other Christians to accompany and help the missionary on evangelistic tours has tended very considerably to the increase of the number of hearers and converts, as well as to the building up of the faith of the Christians engaged in the work.

5. Edifying Workers and Stimulating Missionary Zeal.

The custom of gathering the native workers of any district for worship and devotion (as is usual in the month of September) has proved a great blessing for the edification of the workers and for the stirring up of their missionary zeal; while the more general gatherings of the Christians in a certain area to consider the interests of the Kingdom in their district, as well as the general meetings of the whole Christian body, have served the same purpose for the Christians at large, leading them to a wider vision and to a keener sense of their personal responsibility for the salvation of others.

Singapore Conference

1. Opportunities for Evangelistic Work.

This Conference desires to put on record the fact that the opportunities for evangelistic work among Chinese, Indians and various Malay races are immense, and that they exceed the powers of the missionary bodies, with their present resources, to cope with them. In Netherlands India there are about forty millions, of whom thirty-five millions are in Java. The remaining five millions are scattered in various islands over an immense area. Further, the trade and intercourse of the ports in this field with other countries, especially China and India, make this entire area a field of great strategic importance.

2. The Native Church.

The Conference recommends that for native Christians emphasis should be laid on repentance and faith as the condition of baptism, and on the work of evangelizing their neighbours as the duty and privilege of church members. Street preaching, Sunday school teaching and visiting might be more largely used by native Church members for this purpose, in the judgment of the Conference.

3. Bible Schools.

The Conference recommends that Bible schools be held periodically at convenient centres, and conducted on inter-denominational lines, where possible, with a view to deepening spiritual life, without which no evangelistic effort can hope for success.

4. European Community.

The Conference earnestly invites the co-operation of the home Churches in more effective work among Europeans, and appeals to the European community in this field to help in the work of spreading Christianity.

Canton Conference

1. Direct Evangelizing Effort.

There is a deplorable lack of direct evangelizing effort on the part of the foreign missionary body. Of 208 missionary men in Kwangtung 136 are classed as evangelistic workers, two-thirds of whom share their time with educational work. Of the remainder, many are so burdened with the administrative work of the Missions and other duties as to render much direct evangelistic effort impossible. Workers, educational and medical as well as evangelistic, should be freed to do more direct evangelistic work. By a more systematic organization of our mission work all so-called evangelistic workers might be freed for their special work. For each language area at least one Chinese and one foreign missionary possessed of the evangelistic gift should be freed by their Churches or Missions for general evangelistic effort in that area.

2. Evangelistic Opportunities and Methods.

At the present time great numbers of thinking Chinese, especially those of the student class, have discarded their former worship, not only abandoning but even destroying idols and temples, and are already fairly conversant with the principles of Christianity. There should be an interchange of Chinese and foreign evangelists between Missions wherever possible, in order, by focussing attention upon a given point, to lead to more definite decisions for Christ. Each large centre should have a union evangelistic committee to watch for exceptional opportunities for an aggressive campaign and to plan for the men and methods to be employed.

3. Advantageous Use of Evangelistic Gifts.

The services of not a few efficient men have been lost to the Church because they have been put into places not befitting their talents. There is need for both the Chinese Church and the missionary to exalt the evangelistic office, to emphasize the dignity and opportunity for the large service afforded by the ministry. Every Chinese pastor, every foreign missionary and the entire Church should be on the alert to discover special evangelistic gifts, whether among the trained or untrained, and by conjoining man and opportunity, to increase our working force and its efficiency.

4. Compensation for Evangelistic Workers.

There is great diversity in the salaries paid evangelistic workers. In many cases these are less than salaries paid to workers of equal training in other branches of Christian service. The ministry of the Gospel involves sacrifice, but we none the less believe the labourer is worthy of his hire and that the Chinese evangelists are at present underpaid. We should aim at compensation for evangelistic workers adequate to meet the social demands of the community in which they serve, keeping in mind the ability of the Chinese Church to continue such salaries, as it takes over the support of these workers.

5. A Larger Use of Voluntary Workers.

A much larger use of lay workers is possible in an unofficial or semi-official capacity. We need not only the highly trained, salaried worker, but a large body of voluntary workers. The ideal "Every member an evangelist" should ever be held before the Churches. Greater attention should be paid to the training of our laymen in soul-winning conferences and Bible classes.

6. Stronger Evangelistic Effort in the Cities.

Hitherto missionary evangelistic emphasis has fallen largely upon country regions, market towns and villages. The new conditions demand a stronger evangelistic effort in the cities, the presentation of a positive message delivered as "with authority."

7. Changes of Policy Urged.

The growth of the Chinese Church warrants a departure from the earlier policy of mission-opened chapels. Except in strategic centres no new chapels should be opened at mission expense, and stress should be placed upon the widespread preaching of the Word, the gathering of believers into natural groups for worship and instruction, leaving property matters, along with local self-support and control, more and more to the Chinese Christians.

8. Requirements for Baptism.

There is substantial agreement in relying largely on the judgment of the local Church as to the fitness of candidates for baptism. A period of instruction is considered necessary in order to ensure or to discover an intelligent conception of the meaning of church entrance. At least, repentance, manifesting itself in a changed life and faith in Jesus Christ as the only Saviour, is involved.

Shanghai Conference

The Evangelistic Force Inadequate.

The people of China form a fourth part of the world's entire population, and because of the great need of her people and the growing desire on the part of many of her leaders for better things, we affirm our conviction that the Gospel of Christ is the divine plan for her enlightenment and spiritual enrichment. But the number of foreign missionaries who devote their time to direct evangelistic effort is altogether inadequate and strangely out of proportion to the need, and the present conditions create an unparalleled opportunity for widespread and aggressive evangelization, and grave dangers may arise if we fail to enter in and possess.

2. Setting Free Existing Forces.

We urge upon the Missions and Churches the extreme importance of greatly increasing the proportion of evangelistic workers, both missionaries and Chinese; and in order to meet the present emergency, we believe that as many as possible of the existing forces should be set free for this work.

3. Giving Chief Place to Evangelism.

A strong evangelistic spirit should characterize every branch of the missionary enterprise; all missionaries, pastors, teachers and other religious workers by their life and work should give the place of supreme importance to "proclaiming Jesus Christ and Him crucified," and every member of the Church should be impressed with the privilege and duty of sharing in the holy art of soul-winning.

4. Release of Those Having Special Evangelistic Gifts.

The different Missions on the field should release those with special evangelistic gifts for co-operative work in the important centres, and strenuous efforts should be put forth to present the truth in such a way as most effectively to win all classes.

5. Helpful Evangelistic Agencies and Methods.

With a view to widening the evangelistic spirit in our institutional work, arrangements should be made for special lectures, reading-rooms, Sunday school work for children not in mission schools, the distribution of suitable literature and for advertising in the public press.

Tsinanfu Conference

1. The Raising Up of the Needed Workers.

This Conference tenders thanks to God that He has chosen so large a body of men and women in Shantung to be His people. Therefore we believe He will raise up at this time enough devoted workers to preach His Gospel in every place and to every person.

2. A Spirit-led Church a Necessity.

We recognize this as a stupendous undertaking. We realize also that the work will never be done unless the Spirit of Christ rests on the Church with great power, leading the members to offer largely of their time, money and labour. Therefore this Conference calls upon the labourers of each Church in the province to make this matter of first importance in the business meetings of the Church, and to invite the Christians to special prayer and conference until they see clearly what share God would have each one of them take in it.

3. Joint Administration of Evangelistic Funds.

In order to lead the Chinese Church to feel this work is its own, we recommend that a co-operation committee, composed of Chinese and foreigners, be formed in each district to administer all evangelistic funds, whether subscribed by Chinese or by the home Boards, and to direct the work.

4. Intercession for Men and Money.

We suggest that each Church should definitely pray to God that the necessary men and money may be found to evangelize its own district in the shortest possible time.

5. A Unique and Possibly a Passing Opportunity.

We recommend that it be urged upon the attention of the home Boards that we now have the unique and possibly a passing opportunity to evangelize Shantung, earnestly entreating them to increase largely their contributions both of men and of money for evangelistic work for the next ten years.

Peking Conference

1. Preaching the Gospel to Every Creature.

We recognize in the situation which confronts us all over North China today an opportunity probably unparalleled in the history of missions for guiding and moulding the destinies of an awakened and inquiring people and a solemn challenge from God to every worker on the field to realize the purpose for which he has come and for which every missionary agency exists—the preaching of the Gospel to every creature. In all the varied activities in which we are engaged as missionaries, this principle must control and permeate every effort of each individual. Furthermore, we recognize that this present opportunity is also a challenge to the Church at home to prepare to reap the greatest harvest she has ever been called upon to reap, and we feel that a strong statement of this fact ought to be prepared and forwarded to the home Boards.

2. A Great Strengthening of Direct Evangelistic Work.

We cannot deprecate too strongly the tendency apparent in many quarters, owing to the exigencies of other necessary branches of the work, to obscure the direct presentation of the truth as it is in Christ Jesus, or to relegate it to an inferior position in our plan of campaign, and we view with grave concern the disproportionately small number of those whose lives are entirely devoted to this task. We therefore urge the immediate necessity of setting apart a very much larger number of selected workers, both Chinese and foreign, for the organization and prosecution of purely evangelistic work, and that an adequate proportion of mission funds should be allocated for the purpose.

3. Divine and Human Resources.

We feel that the greatness of the opportunity and the infinite possibilities of this enterprise must drive us individually and collectively to deep heart searching and prayer that we may all realize the boundless resources of God, and that His Spirit may lead us to the revival, consolidation and equipment of all the available forces latent in our Churches, colleges and schools.

4. Various Methods and Agencies.

We must realize, develop and utilize to the fullest extent the services of voluntary lay workers of all grades, and to this end we would emphasize the necessity for intensive work in Bible classes for new converts and church members in each centre, winter classes for selected individuals at central stations, and the formation of all such workers at the earliest opportunity into evangelistic bands under experienced leaders for regular and systematic preaching. Moreover, we are deeply convinced of the urgent need for definite efforts through special evangelistic services in all our Churches with a view to leading to Christ and claiming for his service the considerable number of adherents attending public worship. Special attention should be directed to the establishment of Sunday school work in all Churches as an important agency in bringing the young to Christ.

5. Evangelistic Campaigns in the Cities.

In all the large cities the time is ripe for united tent services, and for evangelistic campaigns organized by a strong committee of leaders who have surveyed the field, studied its peculiar difficulties and determined the points of attack. No efforts should be spared in following up the results of such special effort by personal work.

6. Improvement of Street Chapel Addresses.

There is a universal call for improvement in the quality of addresses delivered in our street preaching chapels, and for the realization of the immense possibilities for extending the influence of such centres so as to attract all classes by a clear presentation of Christian truth in all its practical bearings upon the life of the nation as well as upon individuals. The reiteration of trite and commonplace expositions and exhortations by men of insufficient training must give place to a more virile type of preaching by the best men available.

7. Approach to Various Special Classes.

We recommend, in addition to the regular daily preaching, the adoption of Young Men's Christian Association methods in an approach to the literati, business and student classes, by widely advertised lectures on topics of public interest, by addresses on aspects of Christian truths, by the establishment of reading-rooms and guest-rooms, thus affording opportunity for social intercourse, for the removal of prejudice and for personal work. The growing number of public-spirited citizens should also be encouraged to share in our efforts to arouse the people to an appreciation of social evils and national problems.

8. Hospital Work as an Evangelistic Agency.

We recommend that hospital work be extended as a direct evangelistic agency.

9. Spreading Christian Truth Through the Daily Press.

We recommend to the attention of Missions and missionaries the present wide possibilities of introducing Christian truth to large numbers of the Chinese people through the daily newspapers in all parts of China, and urge that the National Conference give special attention to this subject.

10. The Chinese Arm of the Service.

For the effective occupation of the field and the more speedy accomplishment of the work of evangelizing China, we believe that the time has now come when our greatest efforts should be directed to the training and sending forth of Chinese agents; and we consider that the home Boards should in every possible way support their Missions in the field in the development and use of the Chinese arm of service.

11. Special Classes Hitherto Neglected.

Finally, we would call attention to the claims of special classes hitherto greatly neglected by evangelistic workers, namely, soldiers, boatmen, railway employees and prisoners.

Hankow Conference

1. The Supreme Work of the Church.

The preaching of the Gospel is the supreme work of the Church of Christ, the work which Christ committed to the Church in His last words on earth and which He empowered it to do by His first work on His return to heaven.

2. Summoning All the Forces.

This is a day of unprecedented opportunity in China. All around us the customs and religious rites of centuries and millennia are being changed; and if Christ be not preached it is certain that the things of time and sense will crowd in on all that have been hitherto connected with the spiritual realm. It is of the utmost importance, therefore, that all the present forces of the Church be brought into the fighting line. These present forces include not only the church officers, but every member. In this day of stress there is work for all, and all must be set to work.

3. Special Forms of Evangelistic Work.

The Conference has heard with joy of special forms of evangelistic work carried on by various Missions which have proved fruitful. Among these are the following:—

- (1) The distribution of Christian literature in the autumn by various workers at Nanyoh, and at other seasons of the year in house-to-house visitation in Hunan and in other parts of China.
- (2) The conduct of united evangelistic campaigns in the larger cities.
- (3) The sending out of large bands of evangelistic workers and colporteurs in extended and carefully mapped-out itineraries among the towns and villages.
- (4) Courses of lectures for the educated classes on religious, ethical and other subjects.
- (5) The development of the preaching hall, without any loss of preaching, into an institutional church.

Witness was also borne to the increased efficiency of the usual forms of evangelistic work. Congregations in the preaching halls are not only larger than formerly; they also now represent the higher classes of hearers to a degree that they rarely did in earlier years.

4. Discovering and Utilizing the Evangelistic Gift.

We can discover the evangelistic gift in men only by first using them in the work of evangelization. Special attention may be drawn to the experience of the Korean Churches, where inquirers are at once drafted into small groups for Bible study, prayer and instruction, which are conducted by members who have voluntarily offered a number of days each month or quarter for such work. This seems the best of all ways both to discover and to develop and also to utilize the evangelistic gift. Each agency of the Church, including our educational institutions, should be enlisted in this work by the organization of evangelistic bands, or by the utilization of the Christians in some other way in the work of bringing their fellows to Christ. But whatever means be adopted, there is need that we follow the example of our Saviour, and of the Church at Antioch, and spend time in prayer so that we may receive the assured guidance of the Spirit in the selection of preachers.

5. Making Preaching Effectual.

There is need of fellowship between preachers and hearers. If the hearers are of the educated classes, their point of view must be understood; if idolaters, their own thoughts of idols should be considered. More than ever the materialism and agnosticism of Japan and the West are spreading, and our presentation of the Gospel can be helped by the thought of the best Christian writers of the West. Preaching to the crowd made up of men full of the idea that they are "born brothers," there is an opportunity of telling them of the One Father from whom every fatherhood is named. We can teach them through their political thoughts and views, and through the events of everyday life. But to make the preaching effectual, it must be a preaching of Christ and Him crucified, by men convinced of the truth that in Him there is salvation here and now for every man who will believe the love that God has shown in His gift of His only Son, Jesus Christ.

China National Conference

1. A Great Door and Effectual Opened in China.

Our Lord Jesus Christ has laid upon His Church as a primary duty the preaching of the Gospel to all nations. There come times in the history of nations when their need of the message of eternal life becomes manifestly urgent. It is such a time in China now, and in God's providence there is an opportunity corresponding to the urgency of the need. A great door and effectual is opened in China for the direct preaching of the Gospel. Never have all classes of the people been as accessible as they are now. Never have they been so ready to give a respectful hearing to the message. Never has there been such a significant inclination on the part of men in high position to look toward Christians for the sympathy, the help and the inspiration which they feel that they and the people need in this period of change and reconstruction.

2. Foreign Missions and the Chinese Church.

At this critical juncture, the Chinese Churches have reached the stage in their development at which it appears fitting to recognize that the responsibility for the work of evangelizing the nation, and the chief place in carrying out the task, must be assigned to the Chinese Churches. We believe that they will gladly welcome the fullest co-operation and assistance which the foreign Missions can give them. In the main, China must be evangelized by the Chinese. Urgent prayer is called for at the present time on behalf of the Chinese Churches, that they may have a deepened sense of their responsibility and of their great opportunity, and a quickened evangelistic spirit resulting in both individual and co-operative effort. The foreign Missions will best contribute to this end, not by weakening their staff of evangelistic workers, but rather by directing their own efforts along lines of more complete co-operation with the Chinese Churches, giving them the strongest possible backing and support.

3. Need of Increased Evangelistic Staff and Equipment.

While fully recognizing the great evangelistic value of all the educational, medical and other institutional work, the Conference considers it urgently important at the present time to provide for and to safeguard the maintenance of an adequate supply of workers, Chinese and foreign, for the organization, prosecution and extension of purely evangelistic work, and urges that a due proportion of funds be allocated for effective equipment for this purpose.

4. Discovery and Development of Workers.

We feel that the greatness of the opportunity and the infinite possibilities of this enterprise must drive us individually and collectively to deep heart-searching and prayer that we may all realize the boundless resources of God, and that His Spirit may lead us to the revival, consolidation and equipment of all the available forces latent in our Churches, colleges and schools. The principle that all church members should be witnesses and workers for Christ needs to be pressed upon the Churches with fresh emphasis. Pastors and other leaders should in every way give encouragement to the church members to learn to work by working. Full use should be made of special evangelistic campaigns and similar movements with a view to the discovery and development of men endowed with evangelistic gifts.

5. Evangelistic Services.

We must realize, develop and utilize to the fullest extent the service of voluntary lay workers of all grades, and to this end we would emphasize the necessity for intensive work in Bible classes for new converts and church members in each centre, winter classes for selected individuals at central stations and the formation of all such workers, at the earliest opportunity, into evangelistic bands under experienced leaders for regular systematic preaching. Moreover, we are deeply convinced of the urgent need for definite efforts through special evangelistic services in all our Churches with a view to leading to Christ and claiming for His service a considerable number of adherents attending public worship. We recommend that individuals specially gifted for holding evangelistic missions on behalf of this class should be set free and used in this work.

6. Work for the Young and the Aged.

Special attention should be directed, on the one hand, to the establishment of Sunday school work in all Churches as an important agency in bringing the young to Christ, and, on the other, to the devising of means for reaching the aged whose urgent need of the Gospel and power to accept it unto salvation must never be forgotten.

7. The Time Ripe for a Great Forward Movement.

The Conference believes that the time is ripe for a great forward movement in the evangelization of special classes in cities. The call is urgent for comprehensive plans carried out with careful organization that will embrace the actual work and the conservation of results. We appeal, therefore, to the Churches in China to plan together for a co-ordinated evangelistic campaign in the immediate future, beginning with the larger cities. To ensure the success of such a national evangelistic campaign, united effort on the part of the Christian forces in each locality is a first requisite. Recent experience has shown that there is no other line of effort in which the co-operation of all Com-munions is easier to bring about or more fruitful in results, and we request the China Continuation Committee to take such action as may be necessary for the prosecution of such a campaign.

8. Prayer.

In conclusion, we record our conviction that the greatness and urgency of the task now set before us call for earnest prayer on the part of God's people throughout the world, that we ourselves and all Christ's followers in China may be filled with our Master's passion for souls and that the Lord of the harvest will thrust forth labourers into this harvest.

Moukden Conference

1. The Duty of Every Christian.

It is the duty of every one who believes in Christ to bear witness to Him and to make known His salvation as God gives him opportunity.

2. Preparing Christians for Evangelistic Service.

Missionaries and pastors should give special attention to the instruction and training of Christians with a view to preparing them for evangelistic service.

3. Helpful Ministries of Church Members.

The local Church and its members must sustain pastors and evangelists in their duties and constantly bear them up in prayer. The church members can also give much real help by forming preaching bands, as has already been done in some places, these bands going about together to surrounding villages, market towns or city streets, so that many may be enriched with the blessings of the Gospel.

4. The Present Opportunity.

We earnestly recommend all our Christians to bear in mind that the present is a unique opportunity in the history of missions and we feel how disastrous it would be were we to allow it to slip by.

Seoul Conference

1. Numerical Growth of the Church.

There has been a steady growth in the number of baptized members in our Churches during the last ten years, the increase being from 14,000 in 1902 to 68,000 in 1912. During the last year there were 11,700 baptisms in the six Federated Missions alone. A steady growth in the number of catechumens and seekers was noticeable till 1910. During the last two years, however, there has been a considerable decrease in these two classes. This has been due in a measure to emigration to Manchuria, and also to the lessening of interest on the part of the general public in Christian gatherings, these having now ceased to be a new and popular thing.

2. Less Preaching Than Formerly.

On account of the fact that both missionaries and Korean leaders have been forced to put much time and energy into institutional work, and into the maintenance of organization in the growing Church, less time and zealous effort than formerly have been given by them to the direct preaching of the Gospel to non-Christians.

3. More Evangelistic Work Essential.

All missionaries and Korean leaders should be urged to put, as far as possible, more time and zealous effort into the work of direct personal evangelization, and a definite time should be given by each missionary every year solely to evangelistic work among non-Christians.

4. Maintaining a High Standard of Christian Living.

Discipline should be exercised more strictly, according to the regulations of each Church, thus assisting in maintaining a high standard of Christian living.

5. Developing the Evangelistic Spirit.

The evangelistic spirit among all members should be steadily developed.

6. Conserving Results.

More attention should be paid to the conservation of results by an earnest effort to lead new believers into a vital religious experience, and by placing more emphasis upon the training of the young men and women of the seminaries and Bible schools to become real soul-winners.

7. Sunday Schools for Non-Christian Children.

Where possible, Sunday schools should be organized for non-Christian children.

Tokyo Conference of Missionaries

1. Wider and More Fruitful Evangelization.

For wider and more fruitful evangelization this Conference recommends tempering and sharpening the tools; that is, an intensive work in the Church, the development of a deeper experience of "the reality of Christ," of a personal responsibility for service, making each Christian an effective volunteer worker; also, a fuller spiritual equipment of evangelists, and an increasingly close and helpful relation between missionary and evangelist and among the evangelists themselves. These should meet from time to time in workers' conferences for mutual comforting and heartening, and should be sent to their work in the hard places at least as our Lord did, "two by two, whithersoever He Himself would come;" and occasionally be given spiritual and mental refreshment and recreation by a return for study, if not for a scholastic year or part of it, at least for the summer schools of theology as now held.

2. Personal Work for Individuals.

The Conference urges personal work, individual work for individuals, by pastors, missionaries, evangelists and lay members, on the principle of "let him that heareth say, Come;" a more exultant Christianity and a more general presentation to individuals of the facts and truths and blessings of the religion of Christ; making friends of men and women of influence for their own sake and for that of their influence, but being open also to the approach of the weary and heavy laden and leading them to an experience of the yoke and rest of Christ.

3. Multifarious Evangelistic Efforts.

The Conference recommends widespread plans and efforts to bring the Gospel to every individual, especially in the unreached village population, by street preaching, by separate denominational and union mission halls, by both separate and union evangelistic tours by missionaries and evangelists of different denominations and by preaching, the selling of Scriptures and the broadcast distribution of tracts and leaflets at railway stations, provincial exhibitions, religious festivals and all great gatherings of the people.

4. Sunday Schools and Week-day Bible Schools.

A fuller use should be made of the Sunday school or week-day Bible school—working in it if possible, but at any rate for it, magnifying it, leading Christian and non-Christian people alike better to esteem it, leading adults into it, helping in the national and provincial associations and in the improvement of literature and methods by all means possible.

5. Work for Railway and Factory Employees.

Work for railway men and factory operators at their rest hours or on their rest days, and for other special classes, should be inaugurated and extended.

6. Indirect Methods.

Wise use should be made of auxiliary methods, such as the teaching of English and speaking in public schools and in non-Christian young men's societies—all those lines of work commonly called indirect or less direct evangelization.

Tokyo Conference of Japanese Leaders

1. A Three Years' Evangelistic Campaign.

In view of the present condition of the Christian Church in Japan we feel the necessity of a great co-operative movement which should be entered into by all denominations. This great co-operative movement should be carried on under the direction of the Continuation Committee of Japan, and should be continued for the term of three years. For this purpose, the sum of Yen 30,000 should be raised from among our Japanese and foreign friends. The raising of this fund should be entrusted to the Continuation Committee of Japan.

2. Speakers and Leaders from Japan and from Abroad.

To aid in this work of evangelization, prominent preachers and leading members of all denominations in Japan should be asked to give their assistance, and distinguished speakers should be secured from abroad through the kindness of the Continuation Committee of the Edinburgh World Missionary Conference.

Japan National Conference

1. Timely Methods.

For wider and more fruitful evangelization this Conference recommends the following general methods as specially timely:—

- (1) Renewed attention to the full equipment of workers.
- (2) More aggressive individual work by the rank and file of church membership as well as by the ministry itself.
- (3) Special local movements to reach country communities and the untouched masses in the cities.

- (4) In view of the vast number of children in attendance upon the public schools who are growing up without religious training, increased emphasis on Sunday school work and more careful conservation of its results.
- (5) The extension of work for special classes.
- (6) The wise use of auxiliary methods or those lines of evangelization called indirect.
- (7) Increased emphasis throughout the whole Church in Japan on the observance of the Lord's Day for rest and worship, and as indispensable to the evangelization of the nation.

2. A Three Years' Forward Movement Proposed.

In view of the present condition of the Christian Church in Japan we feel the necessity of a great forward movement, to be entered into by all denominations, in accordance with the following plan:—

- (1) It shall be carried on upon the initiative of and in consultation with the Continuation Committee of Japan.
- (2) Its objects shall be:—
 - a. A deeper and more exultant experience of the life of Christ in the individual soul, resulting in more earnest efforts to lead others to the Saviour.
 - b. A widespread presentation of gospel truth to the whole non-Christian community.
- (3) This movement shall be continued for a term of three years.
- (4) To aid in this work of evangelization two groups of workers shall be organized, general and local, the first including prominent preachers and leading laymen in the Empire at large, and the second being mainly composed of ministers and laymen in the districts concerned.
- (5) For this purpose a sum of Yen 50,000 shall be raised from among Japanese and foreign friends, the raising of this fund to be entrusted to the Continuation Committee of Japan.

III
THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH

III. THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH

The recent conferences in Asia were still wrestling with the problems involved in building up the ideal Church, one which is self-supporting, self-governing, and self-extending,—criteria so greatly emphasized by Henry Venn and the Church Missionary Society half a century ago. Yet there has been marked progress in these fifty years.

This three-fold ideal is most nearly reached in Burma. At Rangoon it was stated that “self-support and self-dependence are already existent among the majority of the Karen and among a large number of the Burman Churches to an extent very nearly, if not quite, equal to those in the West. Churches in one Society call their own pastors, administer the ordinances, exercise their own discipline, contribute largely to their own educational institutions, have their own Missionary Societies, are sending out their missionaries to distant parts of Burma and adjoining regions, as well as to those near by, receive no money from foreign Mission Societies, and take the initiative in many other respects, to a very commendable extent.”

Self-support has its shining examples in other fields than that of the American Baptists in Burma. The story of the Presbyterian Church of South Fukien, where in 1912 the average gift per communicant member was $7.20 Mexican, or the equivalent of a month's wages of the average man, and of the London Mission's poverty-stricken district of Hweian, in which $3.40 was the average contribution—a sum less than half of what was formerly expended on heathen rites, nine-tenths of them confessed—is illustrative of the best Churches. Korea, however, has the highest national record in this department, though their church buildings are very modest and hence cost little. It is a mooted question whether self-government should precede self-support and inspire to it, or be granted as a reward for financial independence. The India National Conference regards the question so important that a thorough study of it was recommended.

Self-government of the Churches has imparted or strengthened a deeper appreciation of independence, responsibility and power, as well as assisted the self-supporting movement. The Moukden Conference happily indicates as the marks of a worthy autonomous Church a higher standard of baptism, a complete system of Bible study for all its members, a truer regard for the Sabbath, and a richer prayer life. It also advised that three Chinese Christian leaders from the three Missions be sent to Korea to study church methods in this and other matters and to report to their church courts. In more than one of the conferences it was felt that where entire self-government was impracticable, the missionaries should only be advisers of the Church; otherwise it will seem to be a foreign institution rather than an indigenous body.

Self-extension is naturally a prominent theme in this chapter, just as it was in the preceding one. Japan's National Conference has the most advanced and comprehensive plans for building up the established congregations, while the China conferences add important suggestions as to a wider propagandism. Singapore strikes at the heart of missionary extension in its emphasis of sincere conversion and loftiest devotion to definite service for the Master. Missionary societies in the countries under purview are hopefully mentioned, and China even sounds out the appeal for foreign missions.

But Henry Venn never saw in Asia such movements toward federation and co-operation as these Conferences were promoting. In all the countries except those represented at Singapore, the movement toward unity is far advanced. The unity is at once that of denominations and also that of the missionaries and their native associates. Common hymns and common prayers are to be sung and devoutly offered, and believers of every name clasp hands and interchange their deepest experiences at joint retreats and summer conferences.

Best of all, this Church of God in Asia sees its opportunity to save not only individuals, but also to leaven mighty nations in this day of wonderful renaissance. Christians are not to isolate themselves but are to share in the higher aspirations of nationality; while the leaders, native and foreign, are called to be statesmen of their nations and of the Kingdom of God.

Colombo Conference

The principle is fully recognized that the Church of Christ in Ceylon ought to undertake its own maintenance and equipment. Under the variety of conditions in the various branches of that Church there is a diversity of method by which the realization of this ideal is being slowly secured. The discussion revealed the following gratifying facts:—

1. Support of the Ministry.

The Sinhalese and Tamil Churches connected with several Missions support their own ministry entirely in many places, partially in others.

2. Source of Ministerial Supply.

The community is strong enough in religious experience and intellectual attainment to supply an ordained ministry for its church life, and is doing so.

3. Progress in Self-government.

The progress made in self-government has resulted in greater generosity and in a deeper appreciation of independence, responsibility and power.

4. Support of Evangelistic Efforts.

The support of evangelistic efforts through indigenous Missionary Societies has been steadily increasing. It ought to be noted however:—

- (1) That evangelistic effort even in the immediate neighbourhood of independent Churches and congregations is wholly inadequate; and therefore there still is urgent need that the work of evangelizing the country continue to be aided by foreign Missionary Societies.
- (2) That the conditions of church life in village communities where converts are few and poor make any suggested sudden transition to self-support or independence unwise, if not impracticable.

Madras Conference

1. Desire for a Nation-wide Church.

The Conference believes that, while there is undoubtedly a strong desire on the part of some leaders of the Indian Christian community for a comprehensive church organization adapted to the country, there is not yet in the community as a whole a strong and widespread consciousness of such a desire. The Conference, however, considers that facilities should be given for the development and spread of this desire and recommends that conferences for the promotion of unity be encouraged.

2. Self-government Promotes Self-support.

The Conference is of opinion that experience has shown that the granting to Churches of a measure of self-government has resulted in an advance in the direction of self-support.

3. Cultivating the Missionary Spirit.

The Conference, while recognizing the marked advance which many parts of the Indian Christian community have made in the formation of Missionary Societies and in the prosecution of missionary endeavours, urges upon the Churches the great necessity of cultivating the missionary spirit in individual members in order to lead these members to realize their responsibility for the personal evangelization of those around them.

4. Conferences for Promoting Spiritual Life.

The Conference desires to emphasize the value of conferences and conventions for the deepening of the spiritual life of the Church.

Bombay Conference

1. Lessening of Existing Divisions.

This Conference earnestly hopes that all missionary bodies and Indian Christians will thoughtfully consider how existing divisions in the Church of Christ in India may be lessened, and how the desire of many for one national Indian Church may eventually be fulfilled.

2. Development of an Indigenous Character.

This Conference hopes that Indian Churches may develop more and more of an indigenous character, so that their influence on the people of India may be deepened and their religious services may become more attractive and helpful.

3. Systematic Giving.

While thankful that the movement toward complete self-support is making distinct progress, this Conference urges that persistent effort should be made to inculcate on all Indian Christians the duty of systematic giving for the support of Churches and of other Christian activities.

4. Responsibility Towards Non-Christians.

This Conference is convinced that great powers of self-propagation lie latent in Indian Churches, and urges that a sense of responsibility towards non-Christians should be developed in all Indian Christians.

Jubbulpore Conference

1. Unity.

There is among Indian Christian leaders a widespread desire for the development of one united Indian Church.

2. Self-support.

We note with thankfulness that the Indian Church has a growing sense of the duty and privilege of self-support, and we recommend the systematic training of the Christian community in this particular. We believe, moreover, that increased responsibility will call forth increased liberality.

3. Self-control.

We recommend that Missions aim at a gradual withdrawal from the control of Indian congregations by devolving upon them the responsibility for the support of the Church and for the control of its affairs.

Allahabad Conference

1. Devolving Responsibility.

This Conference recognizes the desire on the part of the Indian Church for a larger share in the administration of its own affairs, and recommends that every reasonable effort be made to entrust

Indian leaders with greater responsibility and authority. One result of this, it is believed, will be to stimulate self-support.

2. Indian Sentiment and Aspirations.

In view of the present isolation of Indian Christians from the Indian non-Christian communities, we are of opinion that every effort should be made to identify ourselves with all that is good in the patriotic sentiment and aspirations of Indian peoples.

3. Spiritual Hospitality.

In the case of members of a Church going to a place where there is no Church of that communion, but where another Mission has a congregation willing to receive him into fellowship during his stay there, we desire to encourage the practice of granting letters of commendation to spiritual fellowship, the membership of the person in his own Church not being thereby affected. This plan of extending "spiritual hospitality," as it has well been called, is applicable alike to European and to Indian Churches.

4. Self-support.

While acknowledging very creditable progress towards self-support, we find there is need to put forth even more strenuous efforts in this direction. We would recommend:—

- (1) That the system of decreasing grants for pastoral support be more generally adopted, as being calculated to add to the sense of responsibility on the part of Indian congregations.
- (2) That Indian pastors, wherever advisable, throw themselves wholly on the support of the Indian Church. Systematic giving and tithing are suggested as helpful means towards securing self-support.

5. Provident Funds and Pensions.

We recommend that a fuller provision be made for the security of Indian agents in mission employ, and for their old age by the introduction of the system of provident funds and pensions for teachers and workers in mission service.

6. Missionary Spirit.

We would urge the supreme importance of doing everything possible to increase the missionary spirit within the Indian Church.

7. Aspirations Towards Unity.

The Conference notes with satisfaction the desire on the part of the leaders of the Indian Church to draw closer together than they are at the present time.

Lahore Conference

1. Freedom of Worship and Organization.

Greater freedom in the forms of worship and organization, as demanded by Indian opinion, should be allowed to congregations.

2. Self-support.

Considering the importance of self-support to the life of the Church and the hearty response met with where the subject has been adequately presented, a strong interdenominational committee should be appointed to study the methods and to further the development of self-support.

3. Withdrawal of Foreign Control.

With a view to avoiding the perpetuation of such drawbacks as are involved in that relation of the foreign missionary to the congregation which is inevitable in its initial stages, such control should be lessened to the utmost degree possible so as to further a truly natural and healthy growth. In pursuance of the above principle, so far as ecclesiastical system allows, congregations, as soon as they are self-supporting, should be regarded as altogether self-governing units of the particular body to which they belong.

Calcutta Conference

1. Development of One Nation-wide Church.

No marked tendency on the part of the mass of Indian Christians towards the development of one national Church has been observed. Some, however, of the educated members of the Indian Christian community deprecate denominationalism and desire a united Church.

2. Self-support.

This Conference recognizes that advance is gradually being made in many quarters towards self-support by Indian Churches, and it is of opinion that much more can and ought to be done in this direction.

3. Stimulating the Spirit of Independence.

This Conference finds that some Missions are gradually withdrawing financial aid from the Indian Churches, with a view to stimulating the spirit of independence, and it strongly recommends that all available means should be used to foster self-support and self-propagation.

4. Cessation of Foreign Control.

This Conference recommends that the members of the Indian Churches be encouraged to take up in an increasing measure the responsibility of managing their own Church affairs, and that Missionary Societies should, whenever possible, cease to exercise control, while affording unremitting encouragement through sympathetic counsel.

5. Cultivating the Missionary Spirit.

This Conference is of opinion that the Indian Churches should be more fully urged to realize their great responsibility in the matter of the evangelization of their fellow-countrymen, and to cultivate the missionary spirit which is born of a consuming desire to win souls for Christ.

India National Conference

1. Development of the Church.

This Conference notes with profound thankfulness to God that, as the outcome of Christian effort in this Empire, there is now an Indian Church firmly established which, not only in its numerical growth, but also in the reality and vigour of its spiritual life, in the development of its organization and in the growth of its missionary zeal, affords great cause for encouragement. It is the conviction of this Conference that the stage has been reached when every effort should be made to make the Indian Church in reality the most efficient factor in the Christian propaganda in this land. To this end, it is essential that the Church in Western lands should continue to co-operate in the further development of the Indian Church, that it may most effectively accomplish its providential mission in the regeneration of India.

2. Desire for a Comprehensive Church.

This Conference is of the opinion that there is undoubtedly a strong desire on the part of many of the leaders of the Indian Christian community for a comprehensive church organization adapted to the country. While the community as a whole, as might be expected from its origin and history, cannot be said to have shown any strong and widespread desire in this direction, neither can it be said that there is anything within the community itself which would militate against the realization of such an ideal. This Conference, therefore, considers that every facility should be afforded for the spread and development of this desire in the Indian Christian community at large.

3. Freedom for Self-expression.

While this Conference believes that the Indian Church should continue to receive and absorb every good influence which the Church of the West may impart to it, it also believes that in respect of forms and organization, the Indian Church should have entire freedom to develop on such lines as will conduce to the most natural expression of the spiritual instincts of Indian Christians.

4. Self-support.

In view of the remarkable advance made in recent years in the direction of self-support in certain parts of the country and in view of its importance to the life of the Church, this Conference recommends that the National Council [see under Co-operation] undertake a study of the whole subject of self-support; for example, the idea implied by the term self-support in various areas, the methods which have proved most fruitful in results, and the effect which the endeavour to attain self-support and the measure of attainment already reached have had on the life and development of the Church. The results of such a study should be made widely available, so as to help forward the attainment of complete financial independence by the Church in every part of India.

5. Missionary Efforts.

This Conference recognizes with thankfulness the marked advance which, in many parts, the Christian community has made in the formation of Missionary Societies and in the prosecution of missionary endeavours, but it would emphasize the great importance of cultivating the missionary spirit in individual members, in order to lead them to realize their personal responsibility for the evangelization of those around them. In order to secure the practical realization of this object, this Conference feels that the National Council should undertake to collect all information regarding this branch of missionary effort, so that the various effective methods of fostering the evangelistic spirit of Christians may be everywhere utilized.

6. Solidarity with the Nation.

This Conference considers that isolation of any section of Indian Christians from the other communities is strongly to be deprecated. In view of the rapid change that India is undergoing in all departments of national life and activity, and in view of opportunities for service thereby afforded, this Conference would urge that every effort be made to encourage such a sympathetic knowledge of, and interest in, Indian affairs as will enable the Indian Christian community to take its rightful share in the regeneration of India.

7. Deepening of Spiritual Life.

This Conference desires to record its deep conviction that the Church can truly develop along lines of self-support, self-government and self-propagation only as it is purified and empowered by the Holy Spirit of God. Earnest efforts should therefore be made to deepen the spiritual life of Christians in all parts of the country through a use of the means of grace, and also through such special efforts as the observance of days of united intercession for the awakening of India and the holding of conventions for the edification of believers.

Rangoon Conference

1. No Change in Organization or Forms of Worship Demanded.

The sense of this Conference, as given expression to by both native and foreign delegates present, is that no changes in organization or forms of worship from those already prevailing, and which are essentially those common to Western Churches, are at present demanded by the Churches in Burma.

2. Self-support and Self-dependence.

From the reports given, it is very evident that self-support and self-dependence are already existent among the majority of the Karen and among a large number of the Burman Churches to an extent very nearly, if not quite, equal to those in the West. Churches in one Society call their own pastors, administer the ordinances, exercise their own discipline, contribute largely to their own educational institutions (locally and for their higher institutions, endowing these in some cases), have their own Mission Societies, are sending out their missionaries to distant parts of Burma and adjoining regions, as well as to those near by, receive no money from foreign Mission Societies and take the initiative in many other respects, to a very commendable extent. In many quarters, however, very much remains to be done and it is strongly urged that no effort be spared to make the above conditions general throughout all the Churches of Burma.

3. Transfer of Work to the Native-born.

In respect to when and how a complete transfer of the work to the people of the country may best be effected, it is quite evident that very few can be found among the membership of the Churches who would consider that the missionaries can yet be spared as co-workers, if the best interests of the work are to be conserved. Regarding ultimate transfer, probably no rule to cover all cases can be laid down, but the matter should be made the subject of frank discussion between the missionary and the leaders of the people. One thing may be held to be essential, that is, to maintain such sympathetic relations with the people as to allow God's Spirit to lead both to the right solution of the problem.

4. The Evangelistic Spirit.

Although the evangelistic spirit evinced by a large number of the pastors and members of our Churches is very gratifying, yet it cannot for a moment be admitted that that spirit is adequate, when we consider that only a fraction of the people are yet evan-gelized—that is, are yet even nominally Christian. We believe that God has implanted within the Church latent powers, full of the promise of undreamed possibilities, and that these are adequate for bringing all the races to Christ, if brought into force and rendered effective. The missionary may greatly facilitate this by coming into personal contact and co-operation with the native Church, and by discernment on the part of both in seconding the movements of the Spirit in those who are especially called to bring to pass the desired end.

Singapore Conference

1. Self-support.

It is the sense of this Conference that self-support and self-propagation go hand in hand, and should be inculcated from the very earliest stages of church development. It therefore strongly urges that all missionaries emphasize systematic and proportionate giving, though such should not be expected of inquirers and casual attendants. The Conference considers that as soon as possible mission bodies should begin gradually to withdraw their support and control of native congregations, and that this policy should be kept constantly before the native Church.

2. The Missionary Spirit.

In order to maintain an adequate missionary spirit in the Church we must secure as far as possible the sincere conversion of the individual Christian. Further, we must see to it that the lives of our people are maintained upon the loftiest level of devotion, and that definite service for the Master is impressed upon them as their highest Christian privilege.

3. Bible Study.

This Conference agrees that systematic and supervised Bible study in Church, school and home would call forth a greater devotion to Christ. The holding of Bible study circles is, in the opinion of this Conference, especially valuable in the student world.

Canton Conference

1. Growth and Development.

We note with profound thankfulness to God that in the three provinces of Kwangtung, Kwangsi and Fukien there is now a Chinese Church firmly established, numbering 80,000 communicants, which is perhaps half of the total communicant membership of the Protestant Church of all China. This numerical growth, together with the development of its organization and zeal, affords great cause for encouragement. Every effort should now be put forth to make this Chinese Church the most efficient factor in evangelization.

2. Autonomy.

We note with satisfaction that the Chinese Church, while recognizing her relation to the historic Churches and to the Church Universal, increasingly desires to assume her full responsibilities. Autonomy would bring upon the entire Church a deepened sense of duty, manifesting itself in a display of energy, liberality, efficiency and consecrated service for the Kingdom of God, surpassing anything hitherto witnessed. This is one of the essentials for a full development of strength and prosperity.

3. Unity Favoured.

We recognize that the Chinese Church, both as regards her leaders and the majority of her membership, is strongly in favour of one Church open to all Christians and is making a more or less conscious effort to realize that aim. This does not mean that there will be a uniform statement of faith, or identity in forms of worship, or one central church government, but that there will be an attempt to make this a truly Chinese Church, which in all its constituent parts will comprehend the whole Christian life of the nation. What form or what name that Church will take is not yet clear, but, knowing that the Church is the Body of Christ, which has its own heavenly nature, and is not finally under human control, we recognize that in consulting together concerning its future development, we are not to consider how we may please ourselves, but to set ourselves whole-heartedly to consider how we may preserve the veritable Imago Christi. Our faith is in the guiding of the Holy Spirit, Who will safeguard the essential liberty of the constituent parts of the Church. He, too, will enable us to share as a common possession the benefits of those varied attainments in truth, faith and practice which each denomination holds as a sacred trust received by the grace of our one Lord. While, however, the Chinese Church should continue to receive and absorb every good influence which the Church of the West can impart, it should in respect of forms and organization have entire freedom to develop in accord with the most natural expression and largest cultivation of the spiritual instincts of Chinese Christians.

4. Promotion of Unity.

In order to hasten unity we recommend that this subject be afforded a large place in the columns of the religious press, Chinese, English and German, and also receive close attention in our local councils and union conferences. Moreover, serious thought should be given to enabling the Chinese Church as such, and not as a foreign-directed organization, to give expression to its own best impulses. Each of the four succeeding conferences under Dr. Mott's presidency should consider carefully whether the time has not come to arrange for a conference which shall be thoroughly representative of the Chinese Church to deliberate upon the name, autonomy, self-support and discipline of the Chinese Church, as well as upon its relation to foreign missions. Such an assembly, called not to legislate but to study existing conditions and to register Chinese opinion, would be timely. It would throw light upon urgent problems, save the movement towards autonomy from ill-regulated growth or mere chance development, and evidence the desire of all Missions to appreciate fully and to profit by the views and aspirations of the Chinese Church.

5. Development in Self-support.

This Conference finds great encouragement in the amount of self-support already attained in certain sections. For example, we note that the Union Presbyterian Church of South Fukien, with 4,300 communicants in 1912, gave for church purposes exclusive of school fees the total sum of $30,935 [Mex.], an average gift per communicant member of $7.20, which is perhaps the average monthly wage of those church members. This Church has now forty ordained pastors wholly supported by the Chinese Church, which is now seriously considering plans and methods by which it may assume a much larger share of the support of all other church workers. The Churches in South Fukien founded by the London Missionary Society exhibit a somewhat similar development of self-support, and the figures given for one of their districts illustrate the fact that this advance is not due to an increase of wealthy members. The district of Hweian is one of the most poverty-stricken in Fukien, and the comparatively rich folk in the Church might be counted on the fingers of two hands. In that district no member is giving more than $39 per annum towards the pastor's or preacher's salary, but the Church with a communicant membership of 1,110 last year gave for strictly church purposes the sum of $3,796, or an average of $3.40 each. But even so, the Chinese themselves say that nine-tenths are not giving even one-half of what they were formerly obliged to give to heathen rites. In the adjoining prefecture of Hinghwa the members of the Methodist Episcopal Church are giving for church purposes an average of $4.50 per communicant. In Swatow, where in 1905 the Churches were paying 80 per cent. of the total salaries of their ministers, preachers and teachers, the contributions increased yearly so that in 1911 the total was $1,308 in excess of what would have been complete self-support in these items for the year 1905, although, due to various causes, the total cost of these salaries has so increased that the part now borne by the Chinese Church is only 67 per cent. In other Churches of Kwangtung and Kwangsi there is great diversity, some being very much stronger in self-support than others. It is noteworthy that large attainments in self-support have been made in Swatow, Amoy and Hinghwa, where even the most illiterate member of the Church has by means of the Romanized Vernacular been able to read and understand the whole Bible besides much other Christian literature. The increase of truly converted church members and the building up of their faith and knowledge are the surest means of accomplishing self-support.

6. The Sense of Responsibility and Willingness to Sacrifice.

We find encouragement in the fact that the Church is now winning its way in many places among the middle and wealthier classes, thus hastening self-support. The sense of responsibility and a spirit of willingness to make sacrifices are widely evident. Following the Revolution many of the people have formed great conceptions and seen great visions, which, together with the desire for independence and the activities of Christians in the new Republic, prove that the Church is entering upon an era in which it should make unparalleled progress. The relation between the Missions and the Chinese Church is of the largest importance in this connection. Complete self-support is dependent upon the sense of complete responsibility. In view of the great social and economic changes taking place, the experience and wisdom of the Chinese Church itself is needed lest the increase in salaries of all church workers indefinitely postpone complete self-support. The Church controlled by foreigners must also be supported by foreigners. In several places the Missions are making, or have already put into operation, plans by which the expenditure of foreign money in support of the Chinese Church is in the hands of joint committees of Chinese leaders and missionaries. Such plans should have the serious consideration of every Mission. The money we use is not ours, but the Lord's. Even if it were ours, a common method of partnership in business is where one furnishes the capital and another supplies ability and labour.

7. Systematic and Proportionate Giving.

Careful teaching concerning the duty and privilege of systematic and proportionate giving is urgently needed.

8. The Chinese Church the Permanent Factor.

All positions of responsibility open to Chinese Christians should be related to Chinese organizations rather than to foreign Missionary Societies. This develops leadership and emphasizes the fact that the Chinese Church, and not the foreign organization, is the permanent factor in the evangelization of China.

9. Home Missions and Aggressive Evangelism.

The organization of Missionary Societies and the consequent growth of the Churches themselves are proofs of missionary spirit and work. But in spite of this, the Church is still far from doing its full duty. Realizing that all other activities of the Church are tested finally by its energy and sacrifice in the work of saving souls, we urge that missionaries and pastors should, especially at this time of large opportunity, teach individual members the fundamental duty of evangelism. As an expression of true and zealous care for the souls of men, and for the sake of example, and as a demonstration of desired brotherhood in service, the missionary should share largely in aggressive evangelism. Out of love to men, and love to God, necessity is laid upon minister, doctor, teacher and every other missionary, to preach the Gospel.

10. Deepening of Spiritual Life.

The Church can truly develop along lines of self-support, self-government and self-propagation, only as it is purified and empowered by the Holy Spirit. Earnest effort should, therefore, be made to deepen the spiritual life of all Christians by a faithful use of all the means of grace.

Shanghai Conference

1. A Manifest and Organic Unity the Ideal.

The Church of Christ is essentially one, and it is the duty of those who call upon the name of Christ in every place to manifest this unity to the world. We can, therefore, set before the Church in China no lower ideal than that of a manifest and organic unity. It should include all those within the Chinese nation who hold the truth of our Lord Jesus Christ. But this unity must be a result of spiritual growth rather than of outward organization. Organization should be expressive of the growth in unity of life.

2. The Chinese Church Moving Towards This Ideal.

We recognize with gratitude to God such growth at the present time, in a larger realization of brotherhood which has taken place between all sections of the reformed Churches in China, in the degree to which the Chinese Church in this area has already moved towards its ideal, in its enlarged membership, in its growing fruitfulness as shown in the organization of home Missionary Societies, in evangelism and in all forms of Christian service and in its increasing exercise of the grace of liberality. These features justify the anticipation that at no distant date the Chinese Church will take its due place as the premier body of the Christian forces in China, and we confidently hope that the growth in unity will, as a result of the Holy Spirit's work, continue until we are all manifestly united into one body.

3. The Federation of Existing Churches the Next Step.

We recognize, too, that at the present time there are longing desires for the immediate realization of the unity of the Chinese Church, and we suggest that difficulties may be best avoided by the federation at once of existing Churches for mutual counsel and co-operation in work, and when this is accomplished, for organic unity. The differences which now characterize us are not the results of wilful disobedience and will doubtless disappear as we, by united counsel and work, understand each other better, and attain to a fuller conformity to the mind of Christ. We believe that the way to unity will open as we patiently study the Scriptures, the past history of the Church and the living experiences of the various present sections of the Church.

4. A National Conference on Faith and Order Proposed.

It is important that all movements towards unity should include all of those who are in agreement on the fundamental doctrines of the grace of God. A national conference of the Churches should be convened as soon as possible on a basis of representation to be determined hereafter.

5. Provincial and Local Federation Councils.

We recommend that the Provincial Federation Councils should be completed throughout China, and, further, that local federations should be formed in all large centres for counsel and co-operation in all practical work.

6. Development Towards Complete Self-support.

We rejoice in the increasing evidence of the spirit of Christian giving in the Church of China, and while we would encourage this, we would also lay emphasis on the importance of the Chinese sharing in the administration of church finances, believing that this will act most powerfully as an incentive to, and training for, the day of complete self-support.

Tsinanfu Conference

1. The Development of a Nation-wide Church.

This Conference finds itself in almost unanimous agreement that the tendency of the Chinese Church is towards the formation and development of a nation-wide Church, such Church coming by way of the federation of existing Churches.

2. Dangers to be Guarded Against.

In developing the Chinese Church, there are two dangers to be guarded against—first, the propagation of unscriptural teaching, and secondly, the trampling on of long-cherished ideals and good customs of the Chinese, lest outsiders regard the Church as a “foreign” organization.

3. Self-support.

In China there are already a number of union self-governing, self-supporting and self-propagating Churches. This fact is most encouraging, and a cause of praise to God. On the other hand, the chief difficulties in the way of self-support are:—

- (1) Weak spiritual life of members.
- (2) Lack of men of talent to lead and guide.
- (3) Lack of financial ability.

4. Shifting of Church Control and Authority to the Chinese.

As the Chinese Church grows stronger the missionaries will rejoice in the transference to it of the control of organization and authority, and the Chinese Church should guard against breaking off relations with the Missions, while the Missions should encourage and help the Chinese Church to go forward.

5. Developing the Evangelistic Spirit.

In order further to develop the evangelistic spirit, it is suggested that an evangelistic corps be organized to rouse the Church to a sense of its duty. The need for individual work is great, and this work might be encouraged by the formation of such societies as “One by One Bands,” “Philip and Andrew Brotherhoods” and “Sunday Preaching Groups.” Individual Christians must be helped to take up this responsibility.

6. Christian Nurture of Converts.

In view of the insufficiency of teachers in the Missions, the Committee suggests that in order to bring it about that newly baptized members receive instruction and training sufficient to ensure their becoming efficient Church members, stress should be laid upon the following helps:—

- (1) Sunday school work.
- (2) Family worship.
- (3) Bible study classes, in which systematic instruction is given.

Peking Conference

1. Characteristics of the Universal Church.

We hold that the Church is the body of Christ and Christ the Head of the Church, that the Church is divine, universal and one; and that therefore the Chinese Christian Church (including all branches of the Church) may claim a share in these characteristics.

2. Tendency of the Chinese Christian Church.

There is at this time in the Chinese Christian Church a strong tendency towards unity, and federation is regarded as the first step in that direction. But the present period of transition is inevitably marked by difficulties affecting both Chinese and foreigners. There is urgent need, therefore, of sympathetic and united action, of the recognition of equality between Chinese and foreign workers and of mutual confidence and greater social intercourse.

3. Needs With Respect to Bible Study.

There is need of the speedy establishment of thoroughly efficient Bible schools or study circles, the translation and preparation of graduated text-books for the study of the Scriptures and the encouragement of Chinese thought in its bearing upon the Word of God.

4. Church Government.

All church matters should be managed jointly by missionaries and Chinese workers, and in like manner the burden of administration should be shared by pastors and people.

5. Self-support.

The duty of contributing to the Church should be urged upon each individual member from the first; the leaders of the Church should lay stress upon the teaching of Holy Scripture on this subject, and should themselves set an example to their brethren. With a view to increasing the Church's power of self-support, it is the duty of members of the Church to consider how the standard of living may best be raised among poorer Christians, as, for example, by the establishment of industrial schools.

6. Steps Towards a Larger Church Unity in China.

The forthcoming National Conference at Shanghai is asked to pay special attention to the subject of the Chinese Christian Church, so as to pave the way for the summoning of a National Council of Churches. A committee consisting of Chinese and foreigners should be appointed to study the work of the Church throughout China, and another committee should be appointed to decide on uniform terms for use in the Church. The preparation of a hymn-book, consisting of 500 or 600 hymns, for common use throughout the Church, should also be referred to a committee of the National Conference.

7. A Common Name and United Statistical Returns.

A common name in Chinese should be agreed upon for the Church throughout the country and the statistics of all Churches uniting should be reported in the aggregate, each Church being at liberty to use these common statistics, provided that at the same time it states the portion of the common work which it is doing, so that supporters may not be misled as to the amount of work done by any branch.

8. Books of Reference and of Devotion.

A list of all Chinese and foreign church workers should be published, as well as a Chinese Christian Church Year-book, and a book of common forms of prayer should be prepared for the general use of all branches of the Church desiring it.

9. Comity with Respect to Church Discipline.

Christians under discipline presenting themselves for admission to other Churches should not be received without consultation, when possible, with the appropriate representatives of the Church from which they come.

Hankow Conference

1. Reaching After Unity.

This Conference earnestly desires the unity of the whole Church of Christ in China, and to a larger number of its members the uniting of Churches of the same ecclesiastical order planted in China by different Missions seems a step towards this end, and they would urge that it be carried further. To a smaller number, on the other hand, the organic union of Churches which already enjoy intercommunion in any particular area, large or small, seems to offer a better hope of realizing a fuller and more comprehensive unity.

2. The China Christian Federation.

The whole Conference approves of the steps already taken in the organization of the China Christian Federation, and would recommend that the principle embodied in provincial federation be further applied.

3. Promoting Mutual Understanding.

We urge all Christians to study the doctrines and position of those who differ from them and to promote, as far as in them lies, a cordial mutual understanding.

4. Private Meetings for Study and Prayer.

We endorse the suggestion happily followed now in some places, that private meetings of ministers and laymen of different Churches for common study, discussion and prayer should be frequently held in convenient centres. Especially would we urge that, as opportunity offers, meetings be arranged between representatives of different Churches, both for mutual conference and for intercession for the growth of unity.

5. Prayer at Public Worship for Unity.

Further, we urge that prayer for the whole Church of Christ and for increasing unity should be regularly offered at public worship.

6. Spiritual Hospitality.

The Conference advises that letters of introduction be issued to members of the different Churches who happen to be away from home temporarily or who have removed to places remote from their homes, in order to make it possible that such members be not temporarily or permanently deprived of the privileges of Christian fellowship.

MEMBERS OF THE CHINA NATIONAL CONFERENCE, SHANGHAI, MARCH 11 TO 14, 1913

7. Comity With Respect to Church Discipline.

The Conference also recommends that no member under discipline be accepted by any other Church without consultation between the Churches concerned.

8. Chinese Participation in Church Affairs.

The Conference is of opinion that if the Chinese Christians were allowed a larger share in the management of affairs and in the control of expenditure they would be encouraged to give more of their time and substance for the service of the Church.

9. Development of the Missionary Spirit.

The Conference notes with thankfulness that there is evidence of a truly missionary spirit in the Chinese Church, and believes that the time has come when responsibility for domestic and foreign missions should be urged upon every Chinese Christian and congregation.

China National Conference

1. The Unity of the Church of Christ in China.

This Conference prays with one accord for that unity of all Christians for which our Lord Himself prayed, that the world may know and receive Him as God the Son, the Saviour of all mankind, and in accordance with this prayer, earnestly desires the unity of the whole Church of Christ in China.

2. Freedom of Development in Form and Organization.

This Conference rejoices that the Churches in China, for the most part, have been organized as self-governing bodies, and believes that in respect of form and organization, they should have freedom to develop in accord with the most natural expression of the spiritual instincts of Chinese Christians. At the same time it is essential for these Churches to maintain cordial relations with the Churches of the West, that they may receive and absorb every good influence which those Churches can impart.

3. Chinese Recognition of the Churches as Truly Indigenous.

In order that Christianity may appeal with force to the minds and hearts of the Chinese people and win their growing national consciousness for the service of Christ, it is of the utmost importance for the Churches to be so developed that the Chinese themselves may recognize them as having become truly native.

4. Personal Friendship Between Chinese and Foreigners.

The purpose of missionary work within the Chinese Churches is the impartation of spiritual gifts to the end that they may be established; that is, that the Churches of the West may be comforted together with those of China by the mutual faith of both. Therefore, while gifts of money, teaching, methods of organization and self-sacrificing service are indispensable, we must recognize that the love which manifests itself in personal friendship between Chinese leaders and foreign missionaries is a fundamental condition of fruitful service in our common work for Christ.

5. Manifesting the Unity Which Exists.

In order to do all that is possible to manifest the unity which already exists among all faithful Christians in China and to present ourselves, in the face of the great mass of Chinese non-Christian people, as one brotherhood with one common name, this Conference suggests as the most suitable name for this purpose 中華基督教會 (in English, "The Christian Church in China").

6. Steps Towards a Larger Unity.

As steps towards unity, this Conference urges upon the Churches:—

- (1) The uniting of Churches of similar ecclesiastical order planted in China by different Missions.
- (2) The organic union of Churches which already enjoy inter-communion in any particular area, large or small.
- (3) Federation, local and provincial, of all Churches willing to co-operate in the extension of the Kingdom of God.

- (4) The formation of a National Council of the Churches in accordance with plans which the Continuation Committee of this Conference [see under Co-operation] shall devise if it deems such a Council necessary.
- (5) The reference to the China Continuation Committee of the following suggestions:—
 - a. That the China Continuation Committee be asked to consider the question of uniform terms for use in the Churches.
 - b. That a hymn-book for common use, and a book of prayers for voluntary use in public worship, be prepared.
 - c. That provision be made for the publication of a China Church Year-book.
- (6) The fresh study by all Christians of the faith and order held by those who differ from them, in order to promote cordial mutual understanding; and the holding of local conferences from time to time for the discussion of the important subject of Christian unity.
- (7) Prayer in public and in private for the whole Church of Christ, with confession of our sins against one another, and intercession for the growth of unity.

7. Methods of Promoting Self-support.

As methods of promoting self-support we recommend:—

- (1) That from the beginning of the Christian life new converts be taught the duty and privilege of giving, and that constant emphasis be laid on the teaching of the Scriptures with reference to systematic, proportionate giving by individuals.
- (2) That efforts be made to aid Christians to secure means of obtaining a better livelihood; for example, by the establishment of industrial schools.
- (3) That all the congregations of a given Church or area, rather than individual congregations, be regarded as the unit in forming plans for the promotion of self-support.
- (4) It should be definitely stated that the aim in promoting self-support is not to decrease the amount of missionary funds given by Western Churches, but to build up the Churches in China, and also to increase the means so sorely needed for the evangelization of the nation.

- (5) That self-government should not merely be proportionate to the degree of self-support attained at any time. Christian character and capacity and evangelistic zeal are more valuable than gifts of money. The sense of responsibility engendered by self-government is a means of producing a large increase of liberal gifts and of unselfish service.
- (6) In view of the advance made in the direction of self-support in certain parts of the country, we recommend that the China Continuation Committee [see under Co-operation] appoint a special Committee consisting of representatives of various portions of the field to undertake a study of the whole subject of self-support, its present position, the causes of its success or failure and the effect which the endeavour to attain self-support has had on the life and development of the Church. The result of such a study should be made widely available, so as to help forward the attainment of complete financial independence by the Churches in every part of China.

8. Developing the Indigenous Character of the Churches.

As methods by which to develop the indigenous character of the Churches, the Conference makes the following recommendations:—

- (1) The Chinese Churches should be organized with local and district representative councils, wherever these do not already exist.
- (2) Representative Chinese should have a share in the administration of foreign funds used for the work of the Chinese Church.
- (3) Church buildings should, wherever possible, be erected on grounds separate from the foreign missionary residences.
- (4) In the management of the evangelistic, educational and other work of the Church, there should, to the fullest possible extent, be joint control by Chinese and foreign workers. All positions of responsibility open to Chinese Christians should, as far as is practicable, be related to Chinese organizations rather than to foreign Missionary Societies.

- (5) In order to promote the full exercise by the Chinese of complete self-government in the Churches, the Missions should in every possible way teach and train Chinese leaders who will be qualified to occupy all places of authority.

9. Self-propagation of the Chinese Churches.

As methods to further the self-propagation of the Chinese Churches, we recommend the following:—

- (1) Systematic evangelistic campaigns conducted, where possible, as co-operative undertakings by all the Chinese forces of the area concerned.
- (2) The training of all church members to take their part in all the work of ministering and building up the Body of Christ, both in corporate activities and in individual work for individuals.
- (3) The urging upon every Chinese Christian and congregation of responsibility for both domestic and foreign Missions.

Moukden Conference

1. A Worthy Autonomous Church.

With a view to the establishment of a worthy autonomous Church in Manchuria as soon as possible, it is essential that it be well instructed and in harmony with the mind of the Master. This Conference therefore recommends:—

- (1) A general raising of the standard required for baptism.
- (2) A more complete system of Bible study for all its members and adherents.
- (3) A truer regard for the Sabbath.
- (4) The inculcation of a richer prayer life.

2. Self-support Based on Systematic, Proportionate Giving.

With a view to the development of self-support, without which the Church cannot be strong, the Conference recommends that all its members, and especially new converts, be taught from the beginning of their Christian life the duty and privilege of systematic, proportionate giving by individuals, old and young, rather than by families.

3. Dignity and Joy of Christian Service.

With a view to the development of a self-governing and self-propagating Church, the Conference urges parents and teachers to impress upon the young from an early stage the dignity and joy of Christian service as the most honourable of all callings. In particular it recommends that in all educational work care be taken to set before the young a spiritual vocation rather than material gain as its chief end.

4. Mutual Confidence Between Chinese and Europeans.

This Conference recommends that, in the development of the Chinese Church, care be taken to maintain a spirit of mutual confidence and regard between Chinese and European workers, and that each fresh advance be united, sympathetic and, as far as possible, in the full knowledge of all.

5. The Church to Become Naturalized.

In order that Christianity may appeal with greater force to the hearts and minds of the Chinese people and win their growing national consciousness for the service of Christ, it is recommended that the Church be so developed that what appears foreign may be eliminated as soon as possible, so that the Chinese themselves may recognize it as having become thoroughly naturalized.

6. A Study of Korean Church Methods.

A committee consisting of three Chinese Christian leaders (one from each Mission) should be appointed to proceed to Korea, as soon as arrangements can be made to meet their expenses, with a view to a thorough study of Korean church methods, especially in such matters as self-government, self-support and self-propagation, and to report to the various church courts represented here, at their next meetings.

Seoul Conference

1. Progress Towards Federation and Unity.

It is to be noted with gratitude that the last decade has accomplished much in unifying and federating the work of the Missions and Churches in Korea. The union hymn-book; a common name for the Church as applicable to most of the Churches; the formation of a Federal Council of Evangelical Missions, and of an Educational Federation; union in the Severance Hospital Medical School, and in other educational institutions; co-operation in the Tract Society, the Bible Committee and in other forms of work; the division of territory arranged among six of the principal Missions and corresponding Churches; and the union of the work of four Presbyterian Missions into one Presbyterian Church and the federation of the two Methodist Missions, show that much has been accomplished.

2. The Existent Spirit of Fellowship and Unity.

We rejoice in the spirit of Christian fellowship and brotherly love which animates the Church in Korea, and the unity of spirit among Christians, and believe that all look forward to a closer degree of formal organization, whatever be the means through which the Spirit of God may lead.

3. Self-support.

We note the measure of self-support to which the Church has already attained, believing that it is one of the great factors that make for strength and character. Every effort should be put forth to maintain and to emphasize this policy.

4. Missionary Spirit of the Korean Church.

We rejoice in the missionary spirit of the Korean Church, and in the great amount of voluntary evangelistic work which it carries on. The fostering and maintaining of this missionary spirit we regard as one of the greatest forces in maintaining the spirituality of the Church.

Tokyo Conference of Missionaries

1. The Tendency of Japanese Christianity.

The tendency of Japanese Christianity is in the direction of the maintenance of several independent Churches developed along the lines of those in the West. A Federation of Churches has been organized for the purpose of co-operating in work of common interest, but there are few signs of a movement in favour of a nation-wide Church.

2. Developing Self-support.

Among the causes for encouragement in the line of self-support are the number of independent self-supporting Churches already organized in the larger denominations, the great proportionate increase in contributions for church purposes during the last decade, and the growing sense of responsibility on the part of many aided congregations.

3. Difficulties in the Way of Complete Self-support.

Among the difficulties in the way of complete self-support are the high and increased cost of living, the frequent change of residence on the part of church members, the comparatively few men of means within the Church, the general lack of training in systematic giving and the many denominational calls upon the local organization.

4. Methods of Promoting Self-support.

Among the methods of increasing self-support we suggest:—

- (1) The development of the spiritual vitality of the Churches and emphasis upon systematic giving as a spiritual grace. This duty and privilege should be especially impressed upon new believers, upon women no less than upon men.
- (2) Theological students and pastors should be instructed and exhorted in regard to putting church finances on a sound business basis and conducting systematic canvasses of the members of congregations. Special attention should be paid to non-resident members, that their contributions may not be lost to the Church.
- (3) In addition to these, a deeper recognition by the members of the Churches of the responsibility for the evangelization of the country beyond the bounds of the local Church.

5. Relations Between Missionaries and the Japanese Church.

The relation between the missionaries and the Japanese Church is in a state of transition. Gradually the administration of all affairs must be transferred to the Japanese and the problem is to accomplish this in a satisfactory way. The cordial relations which now exist are essential and so long as they are maintained there is ample room for the work of the missionary in Japan.

Tokyo Conference of Japanese Leaders

1. The Tendency of Japanese Christianity.

The tendency of Japanese Christianity is in the direction of several independent Churches developed along the lines of the Christian Communion of the Western countries; and at the same time there is some indication that a federation of Churches may be formed, each retaining its own specific character.

2. Self-support.

There are some reasons to believe that there is a good prospect of our Japanese Churches becoming self-supporting. Japanese as a rule are free givers for good causes. This is proved sufficiently by the favourable conditions shown by the Japanese Church in the past.

3. Mutual Understanding of Japanese and Missionaries.

As there are differences of organization, usages and principles among different denominations, the relationship of missionaries to the Japanese Church is not the same in all cases. In some denominations one party works independently of the other, and in others there is co-operation. By increasing sympathy between the Japanese Christian workers and the missionaries they will come to understand each other thoroughly.

4. Missionary Spirit.

It is very gratifying to see that the Japanese Church is adequately missionary in spirit, so much so that in some Churches the earnestness of collecting money for the missionary cause is considered to endanger the welfare of the Churches themselves.

5. Spirit of Unity Among Missionaries.

The missionaries should come to a good understanding among themselves, discarding the sectarian spirit of their home lands and manifesting a spirit of unity.

6. Union Workers' Meetings for Japanese.

In order to ensure a good understanding among Japanese workers, a union workers' meeting (Kyo ekisha kwai) should be held in every city.

7. Co-operative Executive Work.

An executive body of representatives of Japanese and missionaries should be organized and all work carried on in harmony.

8. Promoting Christian Acquaintance and Fellowship.

As far as possible annual conferences of various denominations should be held in the same city at the same time, and their social conferences (Kondan kwai), lectures and prayer meetings should be held in common.

9. Japanese Federation of Churches.

We do not see any hindrances to the advance in the work or organization of the present Japanese Federation of Churches. At present 80 per cent. of Japanese Christians are in this Federation, and there is good reason to hope that the other 20 per cent. will come into such an organization in the near future.

Japan National Conference

1. Ecclesiastical Organization and Federation.

The tendency of Christianity in Japan at present is in the direction of the maintenance of separate Churches, in their organization patterned after those in the West; but for the purpose of co-operation in work of common interest, an organization has been formed which is known as the Federation of Churches in Japan. This Federation is composed of Churches comprising four-fifths of the Protestant Christians in Japan and there are indications that the Churches comprising the remaining one-fifth may enter the organization in the near future.

2. Building Up of Congregations.

The problem of building up the congregations in Japan, with some differences, is essentially the same as in the West. Among the requisites are the following: intelligent, thoughtful, instructive and spiritually uplifting preaching, to a considerable degree expository; careful pastoral visitation; a higher valuation of the prayer-meeting and the encouragement of family worship; the development of the Sunday school with the adoption of better methods, and of work for adults; the discovery of members possessed of special gifts and their wise employment; the pressing upon all of the duty of personal endeavour; the organization of the congregation for Christian work and especially for the bringing in of members and their edification; special meetings at regular times for the ingathering of the fruits of labour; the regular transfer by letter of members removing to places where there are congregations connected with their own Churches; arrangements by which resident members of other denominations who prefer to retain their own church connections shall be admitted as guest-members; the raising up of an intelligent, devoted and educated ministry.

3. General Evangelistic Work.

Among the things necessary are the following: the organization in each Church, or association of Churches, of a board of missions, the primary object of which shall be the opening of Christian work in places not yet occupied, and the gathering of groups of Christians to form congregations meeting stately, and these in due time to be regularly organized; the carrying on from time to time of special evangelistic work in particular congregations or groups of congregations, and also in particular districts; the occasional conduct of a wider evangelistic campaign in concert with the representatives of other Churches. In carrying on special evangelistic services, the aid of laymen possessing the requisite gifts has proved of the highest value and should be frequently sought.

4. Common Worship.

The importance of the observance of the Lord's Day and the assembling of Christians together on that day and at other times for common worship and for frequent and reverent observance of the Holy Communion cannot be given too great emphasis. Sufficient attention is not always paid to order and reverence. Constant effort should be made to improve the service of praise; and for the enrichment of prayer it is desirable that many of the prayers which the Churches of the Western lands have long made use of be carefully translated, especially for the study of pastors and evangelists.

5. Causes for Encouragement Regarding Self-support.

Among the causes for encouragement are the number of independent, self-supporting Churches already to be found in the larger denominations; the growing sense of responsibility on the part of many aided congregations, and the great proportionate increase of contributions for church purposes. While during the last twelve years church membership has been increasing 60 per cent. the contributions have increased between 150 and 200 per cent.

6. Difficulties in the Way of Complete Self-support.

Among the difficulties in the way of complete self-support are the high and increasing cost of living, the frequent change of residence on the part of church members, the comparatively few men of means within the Church, the general lack of training in systematic giving, and further, and by no means least, the many calls of undenominational enterprises.

7. Methods of Increasing Self-support.

Among the methods of increasing self-support the following are suggested:—

- (1) The development of the spiritual life of the Churches and emphasis upon systematic giving as a spiritual grace, the duty and privilege of which should be specially impressed upon all new members.
- (2) Ministers and theological students should be instructed and exhorted in regard to having church finance put on a sound business basis, and in regard to having systematic canvasses made of the members of congregations.

- (3) There should be cultivated by the members of the Churches a deeper recognition of their responsibility for the evangelization of the country beyond the bounds of the congregations.
- (4) Greater care should be exercised in making mission grants to the work of the Churches.

8. Relation of the Missions to the Church in Japan.

In some cases the relations of the Missions to the Church in Japan are those of sympathetic co-operation; in others, there is also administrative or organic co-operation. The period is one of transition. Gradually the administration of church affairs must be transferred to the Japanese Churches, and the problem is how to accomplish this transfer in the best possible manner. In general it may be said that the problem is now in course of satisfactory solution. The existing cordial relationship can be maintained through mutual understanding and sympathy.

IV
CHRISTIAN LEADERSHIP

IV. CHRISTIAN LEADERSHIP

If the Churches of Asia are to become naturalized, and if they outstrip those of Occidental Christendom through the materialization of their hope of a voluntary national Church, Christian leadership of a high order is the logical and imperative demand of the hour. For less remote and more practical reasons, also, the development of such leaders is a necessity. China's great awakening and Japan's advanced civilization make educational and theological demands which a semi-ignorant and narrow-minded leader cannot meet. Such prosaic duties as directing village schools and leading in the activities of young people's societies give added opportunity for higher leadership, if these centres of potential influence are properly developed and used.

How is the Church to discover the most likely candidates for these thrones of Christian influence? "Pray ye the Lord of the Harvest" is foremost here. Parents in lands of ancestral worship have an opportunity to discover them and a patria potestas to guide them into Christian service. School teachers and especially college professors and those who live in student hostels can study youth and their possibilities as can no other class. The Tokyo missionaries held that as most such leaders came from the government middle schools, they should be watched through hostel work and otherwise, promising students being invited into missionary homes. Almost unanimously the Conferences agreed that the tests of school and Church revealed budding genius. Strong, conscience-awakening sermons, delivered especially at the close of the school year when students are thinking of their life-work, are mentioned as hopeful nets for large fish. Student conferences, those of the Christian Associations, and the possibilities of a Student Volunteer Movement, so useful in China, are other suggestions looking to this end as was that of Christian literature depicting the greatness of the workers.

Having secured the leaders, they must be especially trained for their high calling. Providing for them a "ladder of responsibility," to use the Colombo phrase, is a suggestion coming from the very ground on which many of them now stand. The leadership of Indian panchayats is a starting-point well worth considering in that Empire. All the more important work of the Christian community is a training school for minor positions of leadership in the Church. Education is the most commonly mentioned method of preparation for the higher tasks. Among the more advanced nations, colleges and universities are recommended. For the training of ministers, the best theological seminaries and colleges are regarded as needing improvement and in some cases as requiring competent native professors. China and Japan feel that highest leadership can be prepared for only in the Occident. Scholarships may be required for this, and higher salaries on their return home may be requisite. Post-graduate courses and opportunity to study are argued for, as is the establishment of a theological magazine. Modernity is occasionally hinted at as a desideratum, and Hankow uses the phrase "scientific theology" in the plea for a post-graduate course in its proposal for a union theological college. Text-books for such work should be modern, scientific and adapted to Chinese needs. Spiritual qualifications are paramount for Christian leadership, and a divine call and enabling are recognized.

Leaders thus prepared must stand on a different footing than has usually been accorded them. "A footing of complete equality in status and responsibility" is claimed in India and China for the highest leaders. They are to be welcomed to positions of trust and to mission councils as associates, rather than as subordinates. "It is essential that there should be mutual sympathy, intimacy and trust between foreign and Chinese colleagues," declared the China National Conference. Meum and tuum are prophetically seen to yield to the Christlike nostra, so that the money power is shared with the native Church, thus removing a grievous rock of offense. "No longer do I call you servants; . . . but I have called you friends" is the note which differentiates these Conferences from most of their predecessors. A united front, a colossal task, a trained leadership native to the fields, brazen doors swung widely open, and a glorious, ever victorious Lord as our Leader will finally make Asiatic lands the realm of our God and of His Christ.

Colombo Conference

1. Finding and Training Leaders.

The Conference is of opinion that if the Christian Church in Ceylon is to become independent, self-governing and all-conquering, it is a matter of chief importance that leaders should be sought out and trained. It believes, therefore, that much greater attention should be paid to the training and education of Christian leaders, men and women, especially for the villages, and that every effort should be made to provide for them a ladder of responsibility, and to give freedom of initiative to such persons when discovered or trained.

2. Devolving Responsibility.

Much should be done to increase the powers of church officers and members, men and women, and to devolve on them the responsibility for the evangelization of the surrounding district.

3. Educational Aims.

Mission schools, for both boys and girls, should be concerned primarily in educating the Christian and social conscience of their pupils, and in giving them knowledge and training to satisfy that conscience and sympathy when aroused.

4. Place of Ceylonese Workers.

Recognizing the value of fuller knowledge and wider outlook in developing the characteristics of leadership, this Conference is of opinion that the Ceylonese workers in each Church should be accorded a powerful place in its conferences and a full share in its consultations.

Madras Conference

1. The Student Movement.

The Conference thanks God for the growing spirit of sacrifice and service for Christ seen in the student community in South India, and for the inspiration that the Student Movement is bringing to the college students, leading them to offer themselves in larger numbers than ever before for direct Christian work.

2. Status and Responsibility of Indians.

The Conference desires, therefore, to record the conviction that whenever capable and spiritually minded Indian men and women are discovered, the time has come for Churches and Missions to make a real and unmistakable advance, by placing Indians on a footing of complete equality, in status and responsibility, with Europeans and thus opening for them the highest and the most responsible positions in every department of missionary activity, where this has not already been done.

3. Offerings for Service.

The Conference at the same time expresses the earnest hope that educated young men and women will not be discouraged by the obstacles that now stand in their path, but that in view of the greatness of the need they will offer themselves for such positions as are open to them in Christian service.

4. Promotion of Mutual Understanding.

The Conference further urges that missionaries and educated Indian Christians should do their utmost to enter more fully into one another's point of view in the hope that such misunderstandings as tend to arise may be obviated and that a great united effort may be made for the advancement of the Kingdom of God.

Bombay Conference

1. The Call for Leaders.

One of the pressing needs of missionary work in Western India, both in the ministry and in other forms of Christian service, is an increase in the number of Indians of ability, education and gifts of leadership. While it is an urgent duty of the rising generation to be ready in greater numbers to devote themselves to such service, it is also the duty of Missions to prepare the way for the emergence of the needed leaders.

2. Sympathetic Relation to Student Classes.

No pains should be spared to keep in touch with Christian young men and women of the student age, especially in the centres of university education, and to give them the suggestion and encouragement of personal Christian influence.

3. Scholarships for Students of Promise.

More assistance, such as scholarships for higher education, should be available, where necessary, for Indian Christian young men and women of promise, in order that those from among whom the future leaders will probably emerge may secure the highest intellectual equipment of which they are capable.

4. Powers of Leadership and Initiative.

The authorities of Missions might evoke and confirm powers of leadership and initiative by opening to Indian Christians of capacity such careers as would give them greater responsibility and more opportunity for shaping Christian work according to Indian ideas.

Jubbulpore Conference

1. Need of Leaders.

The enlisting and training of suitable clerical and lay workers for adequate Christian leadership in the Indian Church is an increasingly important and urgent need.

2. Selection and Training.

We recommend that all who are in contact with young people more seriously consider this need and be constantly watching for persons who seem to possess the God-given qualities essential to such leadership, and that they see that suitable provision be made for the training of such persons.

3. Helpful Agencies.

In addition to the Church and the godly home, we commend the Sunday school, the young people's societies, the Young Men's Christian Association and the Young Women's Christian Association, Bible and mission study classes, and good literature, as most helpful agencies in the discovery and training of such Christian leaders.

Allahabad Conference

1. Enlistment for Service.

With a view to discovering aptitude for higher Christian service, heads of schools and colleges and pastors of Churches should endeavour to engage the young people entrusted to their care in some form or forms of social and religious service, and should take every advantage of such means as missionary meetings and mission study classes to infuse and maintain the missionary spirit.

2. University Training.

Where necessary, Missionary Societies should encourage and help young men who are desirous of being employed in direct Christian service to acquire a university training.

3. Recognition of Indian Leadership.

There should be a full and free recognition of Indian leaders by giving them wider powers to initiate, organize and control the different branches of pastoral, educational and evangelistic work.

4. Encouragement of Lay Activity.

All possible encouragement should be given to laymen to engage in Christian work by admitting them to church committees and mission councils and by seeking their help and co-operation in all forms of Christian work.

Lahore Conference

1. Training and Placing Possible Leaders.

This Conference, recognizing that leaders of the Christian forces are potentially existent in Christian schools and colleges for men and women, and in the congregational life of the country, recommends that all missionary bodies consider it a solemn duty laid on them to adopt a policy of training such material when found, and of welcoming it to positions of trust and responsibility, implying association in work rather than subordination.

2. Voluntary Lay Workers.

All agencies touching the life of the Church should regard the raising up of bands of voluntary lay workers as of primary importance, and Indian workers should keep this end definitely in view.

Calcutta Conference

1. The Calling Forth of Indian Leaders.

This Conference recognizes that the calling forth of Indian Christian leaders is one of the most urgent tasks in the missionary campaign at the present time. While prayer is an essential condition for the attainment of this end, the following means are suggested as helps:—

- (1) Boys and girls should be trained early to hold positions of responsibility.
- (2) Foreign missionaries, Indian pastors and workers and members of the Church generally should be urged to throw all possible responsibility on young men and young women, thus seeking to discharge ever-increasing tasks by working through their young people.
- (3) Posts of responsibility—evangelistic, educational and literary—in the Church in India should be assigned to Indians and Europeans on the basis of personal qualifications without distinction of race.
- (4) In connection with mass movements the latent leadership of the village headman, or the panchayat,* should be utilized for Christian leadership where possible.

2. Personal Evangelism by all Christians.

This Conference expresses the conviction that the largest results of evangelization can be obtained only when all Christians recognize their obligation to carry the Gospel to their own non-Christian neighbours, and notes with thanksgiving the growing sense of responsibility for personal work shown by Christian school and college students and by laymen and laywomen generally.

India National Conference

1. Development of Indian Leadership.

This Conference rejoices to recognize widespread indications of

* The panchayat is a small council of villagers which settles all matters affecting the welfare of the village.

the awakening of a true spirit of sacrifice and service in the Indian Church, and especially the inspiration which the growing Student Christian Movement is bringing to Christian students all over India, leading them to offer themselves for direct Christian work. This Conference regards it as of primary importance that every suitable effort should be made to present the highest ideals of sacrifice and service to our Christian youth, so that the best type of consecrated leadership may be secured for the Indian Church.

2. Status and Responsibility.

This Conference desires further to record the conviction that whenever capable and spiritually minded men and women are discovered, Churches and Missions should make a real and unmistakable advance by placing Indians on a footing of complete equality, in status and responsibility, with Europeans, and thus open for them the highest and the most responsible positions in every department of missionary activity.

3. Transfer of Work to the Indian Church.

This Conference would emphasize the principle that the work carried on by foreign Missionary Societies should be gradually transferred, as opportunities offer, to the Indian Church, and that suitable plans and modifications of existing organizations should be adopted, wherever necessary, so that this principle may be carried out by missionary bodies.

4. The Indian Church the Permanent Factor.

Recognizing the importance of the principle just stated, this Conference is of opinion that all positions of responsibility made available for Indian Christians should be related to church organizations rather than to those of foreign Missionary Societies. This will not only provide opportunity for the development of leadership but will also tend, from the first, to emphasize the fact that the Indian Church, and not the foreign missionary organization, is the permanent factor in the evangelization of India.

5. Provision for Young People of Merit While in Training.

This Conference would urge all missionary bodies which have not already done so, not only to provide adequate financial help to enable Indian Christian young men and women of merit to acquire the best intellectual equipment of which they are capable, but also to devote special attention to young men while in schools and colleges, that they may be surrounded with the best spiritual influences possible to fit them as leaders of the Church.

6. High Standards in the Ministry.

This Conference recognizes that the Indian Christian community is now rapidly advancing both in education and influence, and considers it, therefore, very important that the intellectual and spiritual standard of men called to the work of the ministry be kept sufficiently high and that adequate provision be made for securing the best and the most comprehensive equipment possible for fitting men for this most important responsibility.

Rangoon Conference

1. Efficient Native Leaders Needed.

In Burma today efficient native leaders are needed in the following lines of work:—

- (1) For evangelistic work, especially in the Burmese language and in other vernaculars, and to a less degree in English.
- (2) For teachers in mission schools.
- (3) For active Christian service as consecrated laymen in every walk in life open to educated men.

2. Prayer for Labourers.

In view of these recognized needs we are led afresh to pray the Lord of the harvest that He will thrust forth labourers into His harvest, and to be more alert to look for answers to our prayers in the schools under our care and quicker to recognize and use talents that may be trained for leadership.

3. Training for Workers of Various Attainments.

To meet these needs we shall still have to use in evangelistic work in villages, men and women of limited vernacular education, but this Conference suggests that this be supplemented by such religious and, in many cases, such normal training as will enable these workers to maintain primary vernacular schools in their own villages as nuclei for Christian work. It is clearly recognized, however, that men of higher attainments are now needed, who are capable of using helps in the English language in preparation for their work. Such leaders should in general be trained on the field, rather than in Europe or America, so that they may never become alienated from their people, and this Conference advises the enrichment of the curricula in theological schools to afford facilities for such training in English, and provision of higher salaries in the case of better qualified men who are found competent to become personal assistants to the missionary or even substitutes of the missionary himself.

4. Theoretical and Practical Normal Training.

Consecrated school teachers, trained in the winning of souls from their classes, are needed now when many non-Christian boys are flocking to Anglo-vernacular mission schools. To this end this Conference advises that in Christian normal schools a place be provided in the curriculum for theoretical and practical training of normal students in this most important part of their future work.

5. To Witness for Christ the Privilege of Every Christian.

Especially do we emphasize that the work of preaching cannot be left only to men professionally trained as preachers and teachers, but that it is the privilege of every Christian man or woman, in whatever calling, to witness for Christ by a godly life and to use his personal influence in presenting the message of salvation.

6. Leading Students into Direct Evangelistic Work.

We advise that Christian pupils in school be led out by their missionaries and masters into direct evangelistic work in villages, so that they may acquire experience in such work while still pupils in school. From such pupils we may naturally look for some students of ability to enter upon higher training for the ministry and for consecrated laymen to help provide for them a better support.

Singapore Conference

The duty of constantly seeking out possible leaders for the native Church should be authoritatively laid upon every missionary in this field, and the Conference would urge that all congregations be frequently reminded of their obligation to pray regularly in connection with this question.

Canton Conference

1. The Discovery and Enlistment of Leaders.

How to discover and enlist more young men and women of ability for the leadership of the Christian forces is a question of profound significance, and worthy of the most exhaustive study. It is in many respects the most vital one that has been brought before the Conference. Upon its right solution rest our hopes of evangelizing the hundreds of millions of this Republic. We confront glorious opportunities with very defective leadership. We believe the leaders may be had, but not apart from certain conditions. To discover and enlist the ablest young men and young women in this leadership, should be the chief function of missionary effort. Discussions in our meetings have brought out in a most impressive manner the significance which the Chinese attach to leadership, based on piety and ability.

2. Importance and Nobility of a Divine Call.

The young men whom we desire to enlist in this service should, before all else, be deeply convinced of the supreme importance and nobility of a calling from God to leadership in spiritual service, and should be strongly impressed with the fact that a life of heroic self-denial devoted to such work not only affords scope for the widest development of their talents, but issues in results of the most fruitful kind and as lasting as eternity.

3. Middle Schools and Colleges as Sources.

In order to discover this class of leaders we should look chiefly to our middle schools and colleges. Promising young men should be sought out and encouraged to give themselves to this work. The ablest young men of Christian character who have had training abroad, and who give evidence of superior qualities of leadership, should receive careful attention. No sacrifice should be considered too great to secure such leaders. Only unremitting care will secure men through whose influence thousands may be led out into most effective lay leadership.

4. Adequate Support, Status and Responsibility.

In order to secure men of this type for permanent service, they should receive a support adequate for a comfortable living to enable them to give their undivided time to the work of leadership. That compensation should not be less than is required to secure capable leaders in educational and medical work. Moreover, financial support alone will not secure these men. They must be taken into the full confidence of the missionaries, and be given a far larger share of administrative and executive work. They should be treated as co-labourers and equals in the responsibility of directing the work and managing the funds. It is essential that men of this stamp be placed in fields where their talents may be fully called out and exercised. In discussions with our Chinese brethren the strongest emphasis was put upon the need of mutual trust. Strong leaders can be held only where they are given liberty, responsibility and a large measure of control. Such confidence will promote mutual interests, and result in a most successful and fruitful leadership.

5. Equipment of Higher Institutions.

Higher institutions of learning are poorly equipped. This is especially true of our theological seminaries. The need for a few of the brightest men to be sent to other lands to study, and return as instructors, is strongly endorsed. Without a highly efficient body of instructors we may look in vain for trained leaders. Theological seminaries should have the best of buildings, libraries, reading rooms, maps and charts, gymnasiums, and above all, the ablest instructors. An increasing number of these instructors should be chosen from the Chinese as rapidly as competent men are available. We urge that strong appeals be made for funds adequate to provide the equipment necessary to attract and to retain the best class of young men. Given a proper share in the management of such an institution as trustees, directors and instructors, Chinese would largely supplement the funds we must continue to receive from foreign countries.

6. The Establishment of Union Schools with Normal Classes.

We strongly urge the establishment of union schools with normal classes to prepare men and women for highest leadership. The very best equipment will be needed. Scores and hundreds of young women from higher classes might be reached through improved facilities in schools of this description. We further urge that parents consecrate their children to the service of Christ.

Shanghai Conference

1. Imperative Need for Able Chinese Christian Leadership.

In view of the great awakening in China, and the unprecedented opportunity, owing to the friendly attitude of the people, especially the student class, towards the influence and teachings of our Lord, it is the united opinion of the Conference that there is an imperative need for able Chinese Christian leadership. We wish to lay emphasis at the outset on the fact that Christian leaders must be called to the work by God and be sustained by His Spirit.

2. The Call to Service and the Appeal to the Heroic.

A conspicuous note in the teaching of Jesus Christ is service. "The Son of Man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister." Christianity is primarily a question of life, and life means service. Christ came that we might have life and have it more abundantly. To enrich life, we must be willing to serve. The best leaders are often those who show the greatest readiness to follow. Moreover, the Christian cause is both a great and a difficult one. By spreading Christianity we are dealing with a power that affects and changes the character of nations. The operation of great forces is attended with great dangers and difficulties. This is also true of Christianity.

3. The Student Volunteer Movement for the Ministry.

Just as the Student Volunteer Movement has given a great impetus to the missionary cause, so will the newly organized Student Volunteer Movement for the Ministry give to the cause of the Christian ministry a similar impetus. It has unique opportunities of knowing the difficulties as well as the aspirations of the young men, and of influencing their plastic minds.

4. The Stimulus of Literature.

Special literature should be prepared on the subject of the responsibility of young men for evangelizing their own country. The lives of great missionary leaders, from St. Paul onwards, could be studied with great profit.

5. The Dedication of Sons by Their Parents.

Parents should co-operate in the dedication of young men to Christian service, for in China parents exercise an unusually large measure of influence in determining the work of their children.

6. Young Men's Conferences.

By bringing young men together, they are given many opportunities of showing qualities of leadership.

7. Enlisting Leaders Through Intercession.

The most effective method of enlisting leaders is by intercession. That is the method our Lord Himself used and taught to His disciples,—“Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that He send forth labourers into His harvest.”

8. Equal Treatment and Opportunities.

There should be no distinction between foreign and Chinese workers. Any one qualified for a position should be appointed to it irrespective of nationality. Steps should be taken to remove any barrier to equal treatment and opportunities.

9. Sharing Financial Administration.

Inasmuch as most Chinese workers receive their support from Missions, through missionaries, it follows that often they are given positions of responsibility which are more nominal than real. They should be represented in the financial administration.

10. Salaries of Chinese Christian Workers.

The rate of pay for Chinese ministers and other Christian workers is, in many cases, far too low for reasonable maintenance and freedom from financial anxiety. The different Missions should appoint a union committee to study this question. On this committee the Chinese ought to be fairly represented. In order that the realization of the ideal of self-support be not hindered, we recommend the desirability of the Chinese Churches providing central funds for the augmentation of the allowances of preachers whose support is found to be inadequate.

11. Importance of Thorough Training.

The Conference realizes the tremendous importance of thorough training in addition to spiritual qualifications. We believe that there should be no sharp distinction drawn between leaders for the more educated classes and those for the less educated. In all Churches there may be found a large variety of talents, all of which may be utilized. Watchful care should be exercised by those in charge of local Churches to recognize men who, by their Christian zeal and influence, are already to some extent acting as leaders among their fellow Christians. These men should be encouraged and instructed in the doctrines of the Faith, but not, as a rule, be taken out of their native district.

12. Better and More Thorough Theological Training.

To provide better and more thorough theological training there should be a sufficient number of well-distributed theological seminaries and Bible training schools, both for men and for women. Wherever possible these should be union institutions. The course of instruction should aim to widen the views of the students and to equip them with an education sufficient to cope with the rapidly changing conditions of the country. Further, the growing needs of the Christian communities require additional institutions to meet them.

13. Summer Schools and Post-graduate Studies.

To facilitate intellectual improvement, theological seminaries should institute summer schools and post-graduate studies.

14. Lending Libraries.

As Chinese ministers cannot afford to buy many books and papers, libraries from which they could borrow them would be a great help.

15. Correspondence Schools.

Correspondence schools with specially prepared courses would be a help to ministers while they are doing their pastoral duty. The courses should be prepared so as not to interfere with their regular work.

16. Scholarships.

To enable promising students to get a thorough preparation, either at home or abroad, substantial scholarships should be awarded to those who meet given requirements.

17. Periods of Rest.

The local Churches and the Missions should be encouraged to provide seasons of rest and opportunities of further study for their Chinese pastors.

Tsinanfu Conference

1. The Place of Parents in Preparing Leaders.

Pastors should urge upon parents the duty of instilling into the minds and hearts of their children the principles of the Christian life, so that these at an early age will appreciate Christian service, thus preparing them for such a service when the proper time for deciding a life career arrives.

2. Searching out Youth with Special Promise of Leadership.

Chinese and foreign workers during the youthful years of the children of the Church should embrace all opportunities that are afforded to inspire them with the honour and importance of serving the Master. Further, attention should be given to searching out at an early age those that give special promise of leadership, that in these an interest in this work may be stimulated. Parents of such children should be enlisted in praying and working for the consecration of such to the work of leadership in the Church.

3. Sympathetic Guidance at Periods of Decision.

When young people of promise come to the age when they are thinking of their life-work, they should be carefully led to a right decision. If they have in mind an ambition for wealth or fame the emptiness of these should be carefully pointed out; if they are inclined towards Christian service, this inclination should be carefully nourished so as to be brought to maturity.

4. Appraisal of Gifts, Training and Character.

Thought should be given as to whether such young people have the practical gifts and the learning and character that would justify their being called to Christian leadership.

5. Enlisting Acceptable Young People for Leadership.

Concerning the enlisting of acceptable young men and women in Christian leadership, we suggest the following:—

- (1) Those already in this service must exhibit such a joy and enthusiasm in their work as will attract young people to follow in their footsteps.
- (2) Through personal attachment these young people should be led by their elders into the enthusiasm of such a service.
- (3) In the personal relationships of all classes of church leaders invidious distinctions of class and rank should be obliterated so as to make all feel comfortable and happy in their work.
- (4) Confidence should be put in young leaders, so they may be led through increasing trust and appreciation into the responsibilities of service.
- (5) Suitable support should be provided so that they will not be worried and embarrassed by reason of straitened circumstances.

6. Intercession for Labourers.

The Christian Church in China should unite in unceasing prayer to the Lord of the Harvest that He thrust forth labourers into His harvest, and should urge the Christian Church throughout the world to join in such intercession.

7. Better Training for Workers.

In regard to the better training of workers it is recommended that more suitable and satisfactory provision be made for the instruction both of men for the pastorate and of those for evangelistic service.

Peking Conference

1. The Discovery of Christian Leaders.

- (1) Since future Christian leaders may be found among non-Christians as well as among Christians, those who seek such leaders as are chosen of God must pray without ceasing for spiritual insight and divine direction.
- (2) Since the majority of Christian leaders have inherited much from holy and intelligent parents, we should impress upon parents their opportunity and responsibility in this regard, and would point out the utmost importance of the Missions doing all in their power in work for Christian children, so as to conserve this most valuable asset to the Christian Church.

- (3) The prosecution of individual work for individuals should be encouraged.
- (4) Pastors in the country as well as in the city and teachers in schools of all grades should be alert to observe the signs of promise in the youth under their charge.
- (5) Summer conferences with government and other students have proved a unique opportunity for the discovery of men of talent.
- (6) By tactfully and sympathetically placing responsibility upon gifted but untried individuals we may acquaint ourselves with their qualifications for leadership.

2. Enlistment for Life Service.

In order to enlist and permanently to hold promising men as leaders in Christian service, we should:—

- (1) Inspire them by example and by Biblical instruction with the deepest principles of the Gospel of Christ.
- (2) Give them every opportunity and facility for developing themselves spiritually, intellectually, physically and socially.
- (3) Give them something to do which is worth while and which demands the best use of their talent.
- (4) Manifest full confidence in them.
- (5) Take all measures, where necessary, to assure an adequate support.

3. Facilities for the Preparation of Leaders.

Among additional and improved facilities for the preparation of leaders we recommend:—

- (1) A larger use of training classes for evangelists and Christian workers.
- (2) The opening of union training classes for teachers of the Bible in cities where government students are manifesting an interest in the Bible.

- (3) The opening of one or two union correspondence schools to assist country pastors and others in their spiritual and intellectual growth.
- (4) The establishment in China as soon as practicable of at least one union theological seminary whose students shall be sufficiently qualified in the use of the English language to receive instruction through the medium of that language at the discretion of the board of managers. This is not meant to supersede sectional theological seminaries, but to supplement them.
- (5) The encouragement of theological students to secure the best possible training in China and of selected students to go abroad for deeper study.
- (6) The providing of a more extensive Christian literature for the training and use of every class of Christian leader.

Hankow Conference

1. Reasons for the Paucity of Chinese Christian Leaders.

It is generally agreed that the proportion of Chinese Christian workers who can fairly be described as leaders is exceedingly small. The reasons for this are partly natural, partly artificial—natural, in that real Christian leaders are usually proportionate to the total number of workers and members, and the Church is still numerically weak; artificial, in that there is considerable feeling on the part of many that responsibility and opportunity have not been given to Chinese workers in the Church in proportion to their ability, and that the new standards of living of young Chinese may not have been sufficiently taken into account in fixing the salaries of Chinese workers.

2. New Demands for Leadership.

In these days of awakening there is urgent need of a type of leader, and especially of a type of clergy, who shall be able to appeal to the large numbers of scholars and officials as well as to other classes who are open as never before to the message of the Christian Church.

3. Primarily a Matter for Prayer.

This matter of raising up leaders should be taken more to heart by the Christian forces at work in China and at home, and meetings for prayer and waiting upon God should be arranged for this purpose.

4. Extension of Christian Education.

Inasmuch as the most effective recruiting ground for such leaders would seem to be in Christian schools and colleges, there should be a large extension of Christian educational work of all grades.

5. Student Volunteer Movement Methods.

In these Christian schools and also in government schools and colleges, more should be done in the future on the lines of the Student Volunteer Movement for the Ministry, in whose work the Rev. Ding Li-mei has been engaged.

6. More Voluntary Efforts.

Each branch of the Christian Church should develop voluntary work of all sorts to the utmost of its power, using methods proved effective in other lands. There has been a tendency for too much of the work to be done by paid members. This is not the way to make leaders, either clerical or lay.

7. Intellectual Equipment for Great Tasks.

In addition to the already existing institutions, there is urgent need for the founding of theological colleges of the highest possible grade, so that students of real ability and scholarship may be attracted towards the Christian ministry as a calling worthy of their highest powers. In the nature of the case such colleges can be efficiently worked only if there is co-operation. We suggest that in every group of three or four provinces the Missions should co-operate in university colleges of arts, science and medicine, and that, in addition, union theological colleges should be instituted. These should give a post-graduate course in scientific theology, and thus produce a ministry intellectually equipped for the tremendous tasks that await the Chinese Church.

8. Chinese Scholarship Always Essential.

It is hoped that among the future leaders of the Chinese Church

THE CHINA NATIONAL CONFERENCE IN SESSION IN MARTYRS' MEMORIAL HALL, SHANGHAI

there will never be lacking a number of men distinguished for their Chinese scholarship, for their mastery of the language, literature and thought of China. No pressure of Western subjects in Christian schools should unduly prevent the maintenance of such a standard.

9. City Churches with Special Functions.

In order to win and retain people among whom leaders may be discovered for the Church, special efforts should be made. Certain Churches in the large cities should be indicated by mutual agreement between the Missions, and these should specialize on types of people, such as officials, students and merchants, and should endeavour to make for them a church home.

10. Reaching the Scholar and Official Classes.

We would also suggest that special effort should be made and special methods used for the purpose of winning and retaining men and women of the scholar and official classes, in the hope that among them, also, leaders may be found in the future.

China National Conference

1. Imperative Need for Able Chinese Christian Leadership.

In view of the great awakening in China, and the present unprecedented opportunity owing to the friendly attitude of the people, especially the student class, towards the influence and teachings of our Lord, it is the united opinion of the Conference that there is an imperative need for able Chinese Christian leadership. We wish to lay emphasis at the outset on the fact that Christian leaders must be called to the work by God and be sustained by His Spirit, and that prayer is imperative if such leaders are to be discovered. On the human side, also, certain things are essential for the discovery and enlistment of leaders.

2. In the Family.

Every effort should be put forth to impress upon Christian parents the privilege and responsibility of dedicating their children to God and of training them to a full realization of the duty and joy of Christian service.

3. In the Church.

Pastors and other church officers should be alert to observe and to cultivate all signs of promise of Christian usefulness in the young of their congregations, Sunday schools and Christian Endeavour societies, and should earnestly endeavour to lead them to regard the Gospel of Christ as their glory, and Christian service as the most honourable of callings. Increased emphasis on the evangelistic responsibility of every believer will both discover and develop much latent capacity for leadership.

4. In Schools, Colleges and Hostels.

To Christian teachers in schools of all grades is offered one of the largest opportunities for the observation of special talents and capacities, and for directing them towards the highest of all spheres of activity. A similar opportunity is more and more widely opening in the establishment of Christian hostels and in the organization of societies for social service and for Bible study among students in government schools. In view of the large potential influence of students about to go abroad and of those just returned from foreign study, special efforts should be made to influence such men. For these classes there is a special need of literature which will set forth the perfect exemplification of manhood in the life of Christ, the Incarnate Son of God, and also the nobility of those who have followed Him in the path of sacrificial service.

5. Conventions and Conferences.

The conventions and the summer schools conducted by the Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations afford one of the largest opportunities available for the discovery and enlistment of strong men and women.

6. Student Volunteer Movement for the Ministry.

We urge increased efforts to promote the work of the Student Volunteer Movement for the Ministry, and other similar organizations with distinct vocational aims, and suggest that the leaders of these movements make careful investigation of the obstacles which prevent men from enlisting in definite service for Christ.

7. Training of Volunteer Workers, Catechists and Bible-women.

The adequate training of Chinese leaders in every department of Christian activity, whether they be voluntary or salaried workers, is one of our most urgent problems. Voluntary workers in evangelistic services, Sunday schools and church administration should be prepared through normal training classes and union Bible school conferences, while, in view of the large demand for salaried workers of all grades, we urge the wider establishment and better equipment of union Bible training schools for men and women.

8. Training of Pastors.

Recognizing the present urgent and unique opportunity for influencing the leaders of this nation through a well-educated ministry, we urge:—

- (1) The raising of the general standard of existing theological colleges, care being taken to preserve a high standard of Chinese scholarship, and that, as soon as possible, graduation from an arts course be required for admission to all our theological colleges.
- (2) The establishment of at least one union theological college of the highest possible grade, in which opportunity might be offered to students to take their theological course through the medium of the English or of some other foreign language.
- (3) That the text-books for theological training should be modern, scientific and adapted to the Chinese student.
- (4) That while primarily supported by sympathizers in other lands, these theological colleges should also seek the liberal support of the Chinese Church, and work in close co-operation with it. The Chinese Church should be encouraged to provide members for the faculties and directorates with a view to the ultimate assumption of full control.

9. The Retaining of Leaders for Life Service.

Unless workers are filled with the Spirit of Christ and a passion for His Kingdom, no man-made methods will retain them in the service of His Church. Nevertheless, there are certain points that demand special emphasis:—

- (1) It is essential that there should be mutual sympathy, intimacy and trust between foreign and Chinese colleagues.
- (2) Responsibility and opportunity should be given to Chinese workers commensurate with their qualifications, and appointments by Boards, Missions and Churches should be solely on the ground of such qualifications, irrespective of nationality.
- (3) All Chinese leaders should be entrusted with an increasing share in church administration, including finance, in order to stimulate their whole-hearted service.
- (4) Salaries should be adjusted so as to provide adequate maintenance for Christian workers and their families, those engaged in evangelistic, educational and medical work being maintained, so far as possible, on an equality.

10. Additional Facilities for Self-improvement.

The following additional facilities for self-improvement are needed:—

- (1) Summer schools.
- (2) Correspondence courses.
- (3) Scholarships in higher theological and other schools in China and abroad.
- (4) Circulating libraries.
- (5) A theological magazine.

11. Vacation Periods for Chinese Workers.

Periods of rest and change are needed by the Chinese workers as much as these are needed by Christian workers in other lands, and the Church would gain greatly if such periods of rest were secured to Chinese workers of all grades.

12. Insurance or Relief Funds for Retired Workers.

We recommend that in connection with all Churches insurance or relief funds should be instituted for the support of aged and infirm workers who have to retire after an honourable course of service.

Moukden Conference

1. Discovering, Developing and Utilizing Leadership.

It is part of God's purpose that the Church should discover, develop and utilize to the best advantage a class of men who are called to dedicate their whole time and talents to the work.

2. A Divine Call Essential.

These men should be distinctly called of God for this service; they should be men who prove their call by the honesty and integrity of their lives, and by their earnest devotion to the call of God and to the salvation of their fellow men.

3. Religious Experience and Training.

They must have personal knowledge of the Lord as their personal Saviour and have strong convictions by which they are determined to abide. They must be trained along spiritual lines, and be developed by the Church to the utmost extent.

4. Power for Service and Strength to Face Opposition.

They must have a special endowment of power from God, and must constantly and faithfully pray for help in their difficulties, studying the Scriptures with all diligence, and so be able to obtain and keep the needed strength. They should recognize clearly that they are used of God and not be tempted to slacken their zeal because of opposition.

Seoul Conference

In view of the fact that the best success of the Church in each of its departments, and as a whole, depends upon skilled leadership, and that the discovery, enlistment and training of efficient leaders is therefore the most important work of the foreign missionary, more specific attention should be given to this matter, remembering that success can be attained only by careful and thorough attention to the following points:—

- (1) Sunday school work.
- (2) Work for and with the student class.
- (3) Continued and increased emphasis placed on general Bible training classes for all sections of the Church.

- (4) The importance of being always on the watch for men and women of humility and zeal who are willing to endure hardship for Christ's sake; using them in voluntary service, advisedly entrusting them with and advancing them in responsibility, and, above all, remembering them frequently in prayer.
- (5) The necessity of holding up the life of Christian service before capable young men and women, as that of the highest usefulness, honour and privilege, and as being the one which offers an opportunity greater than any other for the realization of finally satisfying results.
- (6) The importance of bringing personal influence to bear by engaging as much as possible in regular, practical work with the leaders.
- (7) The obligation resting upon the missionary of closely following in all things our common Leader, Jesus Christ.

Tokyo Conference of Missionaries

1. Discovery and Enlistment of Leaders.

NOTE.—This includes not only leaders in great things but also men qualified to take charge of local Churches.

Future leaders must be sought largely from among students of middle school grade. Therefore a definite attempt should be made to get into closer touch with the students of middle schools throughout the country, especially Christian schools, and more particularly through hostels. Japanese workers qualified to deal with young students, and wherever possible foreign missionaries or teachers, should be stationed in places where there are middle schools. These workers should aim to bring under their direct personal influence the best class of students. Among the means that can be used to reach such students may be mentioned:—

- (1) English and Bible classes.
- (2) Small hostels, and taking students to board in Christian homes.
- (3) Influence of the home life of the foreign worker, involving of course the frequent invitation of students to the home.

- (4) Following up of Sunday scholars after they enter the middle schools, and keeping them under Bible instruction.
- (5) The frequent and definite presentation of the claims of the Christian ministry in Churches, student meetings and especially in Christian middle schools; also to students of higher schools.

2. Suitable Literature Needed.

Emphasis should be placed upon the need of literature suitable, first, for those engaged in this work, and, secondly, for the students themselves.

3. Student Volunteer Movement.

United intercession should be made for a spontaneous Student Volunteer Movement to bring young men and women into Christian work.

4. Keeping in Touch With Former Students.

It is highly important to keep in close touch with students after they leave the middle school

5. Training of Leaders.

It is necessary for the most part to depend upon Christian colleges and theological schools for the further training needed to develop middle school graduates into Christian leaders. In order to attract students of the best quality to Christian institutions and to give them the training needed it is necessary to have for these institutions much better equipment and financial support, thoroughly competent teaching forces and also more effective religious training.

6. A Christian University.

A Christian university would be of great benefit in raising the standard of work done in Christian colleges and in enabling them to attract a better class as well as larger numbers of students.

7. Improvement and Co-operation in Theological Training.

There is need for improvement in Christian theological colleges. The combination of theological schools, while possible in certain cases, is as a whole impracticable, but a certain degree of co-operation in theological training would promote efficiency and economy of teachers and money. Carefully chosen and thoroughly equipped missionaries should be sent out and appointed definitely to theological instruction, but these should be given time after arrival for a study of the language and of the people, preferably in some country town. Men so appointed should be freed from responsibility for other work so as to give them sufficient time for study and for fellowship with the students.

8. Post-graduate Training.

Great emphasis should be laid upon the continued training of men after they have left the theological school and entered upon practical work. We recommend as helpful in this connection frequent contact with missionaries or experienced pastors, summer schools, Bible institutions, retreats and renewal courses in the theological colleges.

9. Study Abroad.

At the present stage, in order to give the training requisite for the highest leadership, some period of study abroad is essential.

10. Ministerial Support.

There is an important connection between the question of salaries sufficient to support the pastor and his family properly and the securing of a qualified ministry.

11. Lay Leadership.

- (1) We recommend institutional and hostel work for reaching the students in higher schools and universities.
- (2) There should be more systematic and thorough teaching of members of Churches, as well as training in practical work.
- (3) The truth that evangelization is the work of the whole Church, of laymen no less than of ministers, should be made plain.

Tokyo Conference of Japanese Leaders

1. The Discovery of Promising Young People.

With respect to the discovery of promising young men and young women:—

- (1) Christian workers and Christians should make special effort to discover such in Sunday schools, dormitories, schools and especially in Christian homes.
- (2) The sacredness and honour of the Christian ministry should be presented before the minds of young people, and in order to do this effectively it is highly important that:—
 - a. Leaders should exert their personal influence upon young people and endeavour to draw them to the work.
 - b. Preachers should from time to time from the pulpit, and especially at the close of the school year when students are thinking about their life-work, preach upon the subject to arouse their attention about the matter.
 - c. Suitable literature, such as the lives of heroic Christian workers and the like, should be published and distributed among young people.
- (3) Such a movement as the Student Volunteer Movement in America should be organized to encourage and stir the missionary spirit of young students.

2. The Education of Leaders.

With respect to the education of leaders:—

- (1) Existing theological seminaries need improvement both in general equipment and in teaching force.
- (2) A way should be opened to send promising young men and women and Christian workers abroad for further study.
- (3) In order to raise efficient Christian leaders and to complete the co-ordination of Christian education in the country, the establishment of a Christian university is very urgent.

3. The Pay of Christian Workers.

It is very important that the pay of Christian workers should be increased so that they may be able to maintain their respectable position in society.

Japan National Conference

1. Discovery and Enlistment of Leaders for the Ministry.

Future leaders will naturally be enlisted from among the student class. They will be found in all grades of the schools, but owing to the fact that middle school students are at an age when they are peculiarly open to the call to Christian service, it is specially important that a definite attempt be made to get into closest possible touch with the students of middle schools throughout the country, in particular Christian schools. The sacredness and dignity of the Christian ministry should be presented to the mind of the young people. In order to do this effectively it is highly important that:—

- (1) It should be made a subject of prayer in the Churches.
- (2) Leaders should exercise their personal influence in the endeavour to win young people for this service.
- (3) Preachers should from time to time speak upon the subject from the pulpit to arouse attention and interest.
- (4) Suitable literature, such as the lives of heroic Christian workers and the like, should be published and distributed among young people. Literature is also necessary to arouse Christian pastors and other leaders to the intrinsic greatness of Christian work and to its high function in the nation.
- (5) Such a movement as the Student Volunteer Movement should be organized to encourage and stir the missionary spirit of young people.

Lay Leadership.

The truth that evangelization is the work of the whole Church, of laymen no less than of ministers, should be made plain. There should be more systematic and thorough teaching of lay members, as well as training in practical work, both through the agency of the local Churches, and by means of institutes, summer schools and the like. Further, we recommend institutional and hostel work for reaching students in higher schools and universities, in order to win them for active Christian service.]

3. Training of Leaders.

In order to attract students of the best quality to Christian institutions and to give them the training needed, it is necessary to have for those institutions much better equipment and financial support, more thoroughly competent teaching forces and also more effective Christian training. In order to secure more efficient theological schools, such union or co-operation as is practicable should be carried out as speedily as possible. Missionaries carefully chosen and thoroughly equipped should be sent out and appointed definitely to theological instruction. Men so appointed should be freed from responsibility for other work so as to give them sufficient time for study and for fellowship with the students. It is very important that promising graduates of our theological and other schools should be given opportunity for further study either in higher Japanese schools or in schools in Western lands. Japanese theological teachers showing marked ability should be sent abroad for advanced study along special lines.

4. A Christian University Needed.

In the training of a Japanese leadership able to cope with the total Christian problem in Japan the need of a Christian university stands pre-eminent. A Christian university of the first rank will powerfully react upon the Christian schools of college and secondary grade and give to the whole system of school work in Japan new life and incentive.

5. Continued Training After Practical Work Begins.

Emphasis should be laid upon the continued training of men after they have entered into practical work. We recommend as helpful in this connection frequent contact with experienced pastors and missionaries, summer schools, Bible institutes, retreats and renewal courses in theological schools.

6. Financial Support for the Christian Ministry.

We call the attention of the Japanese Churches and the Mission

Boards to the fact that there is great need for better financial support for the Christian ministry in Japan.

THE TRAINING OF MISSIONARIES

V. THE TRAINING OF MISSIONARIES

If Asiatic Christian leadership is so important as the last chapter proved it to be, and if a stream cannot rise higher than its source, it is self-evident that the missionaries, the leaders of leaders, must be men and women of the highest equipment and most devoted life. In the Confucian countries of China, Korea and Japan the teacher is the practicable exemplar, as the "princely man" and the sage are unrealizable ideals. India's three hundred and fifteen millions exalt the religious teacher, and even Moslems of that Empire unite with Hindus in reverence for the guru. Such traditional ideals demand of missionaries to Asia the possession of scholarship, teaching ability, enough of bushido to inspire admiration, if not hero-worship, and a self-denying saintliness that will eclipse the external asceticism and piosity of fakirs, yogis and all other varieties of Asiatic ecstasies.

What is requisite to prepare missionaries for such tasks? The Conferences suggest so great a variety of studies—assuming a previous scholastic discipline warranting a B.A.—that the candidate must be bewildered at the sight and turn away in despair. Some thirty desiderata are mentioned in the aggregate which the missionaries say should be acquired in the home lands. Disregarding those subjects which have received less than five votes, including some very important ones and others which the Conferences apparently assumed would in any case be attended to in the theological seminary, or as fundamental to the Christian life, we have these nine left: the geography of one's field, using the term in its broadest sense; its history, so essential in interpreting the people to be laboured among and as inspiring respect in the new missionary's mind; social conditions which are so obstructive in many cases, and so indispensable a key to the life of Orientals; comparative religion, the substratum underlying and illuminating the study of the special religions of one's own field—the latter subject receiving the highest number of votes and nearly twice as many as were cast for comparative religion; the general principles of language study rather than the acquisition of one's future language; phonetics, general rather than applied; pedagogy in theory, and if possible through practice also, as missionaries of to-day are emphatically obedient to Christ's command to go and teach the nations; and an emphasis of theology in its modern sense, including biblical and historical, as well as systematic theology. It is significant that by far the largest number of votes were given in favour of a thorough study of the history and of the religions of the country to which the missionary goes.

Leaving the subjects that were to be studied at home, the Conferences were almost without exception insistent upon further training upon the fields themselves, in most countries in special union language and general training schools, to be supported preferably by the Missions co-operating in the work. The greatest insistence was placed upon a mastery of the languages of mission fields. Two years was the most common period mentioned as essential for this study, though once and again it was insisted that the missionary must ever be a language student, using his hot season holidays, and even his furlough periods in part, for such advanced study as was necessary. An intensive examination of the religious ideas and customs of the field stood next in order of insistence; while methods of mission work, the history of one's country intensively studied, social conditions locally investigated, and etiquette as a key to an otherwise partially closed familiar intimacy followed. Among other items receiving one or two votes each were some of great practical importance.

The Japanese delegates at Tokyo expressed sentiments well worth considering, if we would see ourselves as others see us and would learn the Asiatic remedy for our Occidental aloofness. The Tsinanfu, Tokyo Missionary, and Japan National Conferences sounded the unwelcome yet wholesome note of the elimination of the unfit after missionaries have been fully tried, always an extremely small percentage of a worthy Asiatic missionary body of nearly thirteen thousand devoted men and women. Unworthiness is possible, but it can be annihilated by applying the closing words of old John Eliot's Indian Grammar, "Prayer and pains, through faith in Christ Jesus, will do anything."

Colombo Conference

(Not Discussed)

Madras Conference

1. Boards of Study.

The Conference has heard with pleasure of the formation of Boards of Study for the training of missionary candidates in the home lands, in connection with the Continuation Committee of the Edinburgh Conference.

2. Field Committees Proposed.

The Conference deems it desirable that special committees on the training of missionaries on the field be appointed to keep in touch with the Boards of Study with a view to prevent overlapping on the part of the missionary schools at home and those which may be established on the field.

3. Committee Nominated.

The Conference requests the Federal Missionary Council to appoint such a special committee for South India, and nominates the following as suitable members of such committee: the Revs. Canon G. H. Smith, K. Pamperrien, G. E. Phillips, Dr. J. Lazarus, Miss E. M. Swift, and the Rev. H. Gulliford (Convener).

4. Language Study on the Field.

The Conference is strongly of opinion that, while instruction in the general principles of language study and phonetics may be imparted with profit in the home schools, the acquisition of the native tongues should be undertaken from the first only on the field.

5. Language School at Bangalore.

The Conference welcomes the plan of the committee of the South India Missionary Association for the establishment of a school for language study at Bangalore, and believes that, if it is carried out, the school will meet a real need in South India.

Bombay Conference

1. Important Subjects for Study.

In regard to the preparation of missionaries at home this Conference considers it desirable that those designated to India should, in addition to theological training, receive preliminary instruction in such subjects as the following: Indian history and geography, comparative religion, the religion of the missionary's own prospective field, Sanskrit or Arabic (if possible), phonetics, book-keeping.

2. Union Language Schools.

The vernacular can in most cases be best studied on the field. Training on the field can ordinarily be best given in union language schools located at convenient centres in the chief language areas.

3. Modern Methods in Language Study.

In these schools the linguistic teaching given should be of the highest order and in full accordance with modern methods. It is very desirable that a well-qualified missionary be appointed as director, to give instruction himself and to train the pandits in modern methods of teaching.

4. Religious Ideas and Customs.

In addition to language study, provision should be made in the language schools for lectures on the religious ideas and the customs of the area concerned and for the study of local conditions of work.

5. Financing of Language Schools.

The necessary financial outlay should be met by regular annual contributions from the participating Missionary Societies.

Jubbulpore Conference

1. Need of Training.

While recognizing the Divine call as the primary qualification of a missionary, we urge the great importance of a more thorough training of missionaries at home to enable them to meet the changing conditions of the work on the field. We strongly urge that in addition to a full knowledge of the message to be conveyed, every missionary should have as complete instruction as possible in the conditions and religions of the field and in methods of acquiring languages.

2. Language Schools.

We strongly urge all Missions to support union language schools on the field, where new missionaries may be instructed in the vernaculars and in local social and religious conditions, and where they may receive training in methods of work.

3. Study by Missionaries.

We recommend that every missionary be urged to realize the importance of continuous study. We also recommend that summer schools for advanced study be established in suitable hill stations. Facilities should be provided for missionaries to take further courses of study and training during furlough.

Allahabad Conference

1. Home Versus Field Training.

This Conference is of opinion:—

- (1) That the schools for the training of missionaries in the home lands should include in their courses of instruction:—
 - a. The general principles of phonetics, and philology.
 - b. Indian history, religious and social customs.
 - c. Business methods.
 - d. Hygiene applicable to tropical climates.
- (2) That a knowledge of the vernacular is best acquired in the mission field and should be combined with instruction in the religious thought of the country and the study of missionary problems and methods.
- (3) That the study of the classical languages, Sanskrit and Arabic, may with advantage be commenced at home.

2. Lucknow Language School.

We welcome the establishment at Lucknow of the Language

School, and consider that the number of students already in residence justifies the intention of the Committee to continue the experiment for a second year.

3. Making the Language School Permanent.

We would express the hope that after the two years of experimental work the School of Language may be established as a permanent institution, with the hearty support of all Missionary Societies working in the Urdu and Hindi language area.

4. Language Study for New Missionaries.

The Conference urges home Boards to ensure the attendance of new missionaries at the Language School and to arrange that they arrive in India before the commencement of the session on November 1st.

Lahore Conference

1. Early Allocation of Intending Missionaries.

In regard to the training of missionaries in the home countries this Conference recommends the allocating of intending missionaries to their future fields and branches of service at as early a stage in their training as possible, in order that they may the sooner begin to specialize on their allotted sphere of work.

2. Preparation Best Secured at Home.

The principle should be recognized that certain preparation can best be secured in the home countries, namely, that which applies to missionaries in general and also to all those going to a given country. The Conference would therefore urge that:—

- (1) All intending missionaries ought to have had practical experience in "personal work."
- (2) So far as is possible they should all undergo a course of training in the theory and practice of teaching.
- (3) All ought to be taught a clear system of book-keeping in view of the great likelihood that they will have to take part in administering mission funds and in keeping mission accounts.

- (4) A general study of the history of India and its religions should be made.

3. Language Schools.

With regard to the training of missionaries on the field the Conference recommends that language schools for large language areas be founded so as to secure the better teaching of the vernaculars according to modern methods. These language schools should include in their curricula the teaching of the history, sociology and religions of the country, and also courses dealing with the actual thought and customs of the people.

4. Further Study of Local Vernaculars.

Work in a language school must not supersede further study of local vernaculars in the case of those who will be employed in district work. The endeavour should be made to have this further instruction given as far as possible by well-qualified teachers, both Indian and foreign. The Conference further urges the formation of large inter-Mission examination boards for whole language areas.

5. Probationary Period.

The Conference holds that a missionary's probationary period, during which he should not be placed in charge of any branch of work, ought to be not less than two years. Whenever possible it is desirable for missionaries to be associated with Indian workers of high qualifications and experience during a part of their probationary period.

Calcutta Conference

1. More Specialized Training for Missionary Candidates.

There is need of more complete and more highly specialized training at home of candidates for mission work, notably in subjects relating to the people, the history and the religions of India.

2. Language School for the Bengali Area.

There is need for an interdenominational language school for missionaries located in an area where Bengali is spoken, for the study of the Bengali language and also of the history and religions of the area. Provision should be made, if possible, for the training of women as well as of men in this school. This Conference recommends that such a school be opened in November, 1913.

3. Temporary Committee Named.

This Conference suggests that the Temporary Committee be asked to make arrangements for the establishment of such a school; that this be done by a Committee consisting of the Revs. W. G. Brockway, J. M. B. Duncan, R. Gee, R. F. Pearce, W. S. Page, Miss A. Ewing and Prof. S. C. Mukerji; and that this Committee be instructed to confer with the authorities of Serampore College with a view to the consideration of the possibilities of opening the language school at Serampore.

4. New Missionaries and the Language School.

This Conference urges all denominations and Societies appointing missionaries for Bengali work to send them to this language school.

India National Conference

1. More Complete Training of Missionaries.

Profoundly believing that the present situation in India demands a more complete training of missionaries, this Conference notes with great satisfaction that the matter is receiving special attention at the home base through the Student Volunteer Movement and through newly formed Boards of Missionary Studies as well as through other means.

2. Range of Training Recommended.

Missionaries appointed to special forms of work should receive a thorough training in the home land for that special work. The following may not apply in every particular to every type of missionary, but, generally speaking, missionaries should receive a broad general culture and a thorough training in theology. They should also study the history and comparison of religions, pedagogy (especially as applied to the teaching of the Bible), the principles of phonetics, business methods, Indian history and geography, and the religions of India. In exceptional cases they might begin the study of Sanskrit or Arabic.

3. United Summer Schools Suggested.

In addition to special missionary training in organized institutions, it is suggested that united summer schools might be held for two months or so where designate missionaries of the various Missionary Societies might receive specialized missionary teaching.

4. Special Study During Furlough Periods.

Home authorities should give missionaries on furlough opportunities for special study, and missionaries should be expected to take full advantage of such opportunities.

5. The Vernaculars to be Studied on the Field.

Since it is quite possible to organize on the field language schools in which instruction of the same high quality and scientific accuracy would be given as might be offered in home universities, and since those schools would have the inestimable advantage of being planted in the language areas where students can hear the language they are learning spoken by the people and can practise what they have acquired, this Conference urges Missionary Societies to decide in favour of the vernaculars being studied on the field.

6. Language Schools.*

Where not already existing, a language school should be established in each language area or area of a group of languages. In such schools the teaching of the vernacular, on scientific and modern principles, should be the supreme work; but combined with this, instruction should be given in the religions, social life and thought of the peoples, and the students should be introduced to various forms of work and be encouraged to get into personal touch with the people and to use the language as they acquire it. Each school should be in charge of an experienced missionary (European or Indian). Full use should be made of Indians in teaching. Such schools should be financed by the co-operating Missionary Societies.

7. Attendance at Language Schools.

Missions should be urged to ensure the attendance of their

*In Bangalore, Poona and Lucknow, language schools are already being developed. In the last mentioned there were forty missionaries of various Societies studying during the cold season of 1912-1913.

missionaries (men and women) at such a school, on their arrival in the country, for a period of at least six months.

8. Opportunity for Study.

No work should be given to new missionaries until they have passed their first language examination, nor full responsibility for work until they have passed their second examination.

9. Continued Study.

Even after examinations have been passed missionaries should cultivate habits of continuous study of the languages and religions of the people.

Rangoon Conference

1. Special Preparation for Work in Burma.

Mission Boards at the home base should provide missionaries designated for Burma with detailed information regarding the special preparation needed for this field in order that before sailing they may avail themselves of facilities for self-equipment at home. The special acquirement necessary for a missionary in Burma is a knowledge of Buddhism and animism; but in common with other fields in India this field demands of its missionaries a knowledge of the elements of hygiene and medicine and of the theory of teaching and of book-keeping, while the study of phonetics while on the home base will be found invaluable.

2. Early Appointment of Missionaries.

It is advisable that missionaries to Burma should be designated a year or so before sailing so that their studies may be pursued with a view to the special needs of their field.

3. Summer School for New Missionaries.

An interdenominational summer school for the study by new missionaries of the vernacular languages, ethnology, mission methods, and the religions of Burma, should be established at some such centre as Maymyo.

4. The Vernaculars to be Studied on the Field.

The vernacular languages cannot, generally speaking, be studied with advantage while on the home base.

Singapore Conference

This Conference considers that in the case of new missionaries at least a year should be given them to learn the language and that missionaries who have a special knowledge of languages should be urged to give help in language study whenever possible to new-comers. This Conference recommends that the foreign missionary become better acquainted not only with the native languages but also with the religions of the people.

Canton Conference

1. Preparation for Service in China.

It is to be assumed that all missionaries coming to China should have the best of the usual preparation appropriate to their special callings:—

- (1) As evangelistic and pastoral missionaries, in arts and theology.
- (2) As educational missionaries, in arts, Bible study, pedagogy, with specialized study in selected lines, literary or scientific, when possible.
- (3) As medical missionaries, in arts, Bible study, medicine and surgery, with special study in tropical diseases and diseases of the eye.

2. Professional Studies to be Taken in Professional Schools.

It is assumed also that all professional studies should be taken with men and women who are preparing to pursue similar callings in Europe and America, so that foreign missionaries may be in the closest touch with the best workers in their own departments at home. Further, that facilities should be given to missionaries when at home on furlough to renew and extend this intimacy with their fellow workers in the West.

3. Special Course in Bible Study Essential.

Whatever the general studies may have been, all candidates should have at some stage a special course in the Word of God.

4. Language Study in the Home Land.

Although the free and adequate use of languages can be fully attained only in the area in which they are spoken and by free intercourse with the people, yet much time and much waste of nervous energy may be saved by acquiring in the home land precision and accuracy of method in language study.

5. Early Designation of Missionaries for a Definite Field.

Candidates for foreign mission work should be sought for during their course of general preparation, and designated, when possible, for a definite language area, in time to permit of their taking certain special courses hereinafter named. A year at least might, with great advantage, be given to such studies, and a maintenance, if necessary, should be given to candidates to enable them to avail themselves of such courses before proceeding to the mission field. Arrangements should also be made to enable missionaries on furlough to take advantage of similar courses of special advanced study. Subjects of importance for missionaries-designate and for those on furlough are:—

- (1) Language and phonetics.
- (2) Religions of China and comparative religion.
- (3) Sociology and psychology of the Chinese people.
- (4) History, geography and literature of China.
- (5) Bibliography on China.
- (6) History of missions generally, and particularly of missions in China.

6. Institutions Providing Specialized Training.

Courses such as those indicated above can be had, in whole or in part, in the following institutions: The Schools of Missions at Yale and Hartford, Columbia University, Women's Missionary Training College of the United Free Church of Scotland (for women only), the University of London, the School of Oriental Languages (London), the Colonial Institute of Hamburg, the University of Cambridge, the University of Oxford, the University of Berlin, the University of Paris.

7. Language Schools.

We rejoice to note that a Union Language School has now been formed in Nanking, and strongly recommend that a well-equipped school be formed at once in Canton. We hope that new-comers will be given the best possible opportunity of learning the language most easily, and in the shortest possible time, and as thoroughly as our great task demands. We regret that in the Hakka and Swatow (Hoklo) language areas the new recruits have hitherto been too few and too much scattered, to justify the formation of language schools.

8. Guidance and Oversight.

In order to make better provision for the guidance and oversight of new missionaries during their first two years on the field, the local missions should appoint for each new recruit an adviser who shall sympathetically direct his study of the language, the people and their customs, advise him as to the use of his time and give all needed assistance in meeting initial difficulties.

9. Freedom for Language Study for Two Years.

Great care should be taken that for one year at least no work or responsibility of such a kind or amount as might hinder entire application to language study be placed on new missionaries, and that all possible freedom for study should be secured during the second year. To attain this object, which is vital to the missionary's usefulness, great attention should be given by the home Board to anticipating needs and to timely reinforcement.

10. Mandarin as the Culture Language of China.

We strongly recommend that in order to meet the demand of the time, every missionary should, if possible, after not less than three years of study of the local vernacular, study Mandarin, the language of the greater part of China, now generally taught in schools, and rapidly becoming the medium of general communication between educated persons.

11. Granting Furloughs.

It is highly important that furloughs should not be unduly postponed, as is sometimes done from motives of a false economy and with disastrous results. The difficulty of granting furloughs must be met by providing more adequate staffs and more frequent reinforcements.

12. Missionaries of Marked Special Gifts.

Missions should watch for indications of special gifts in junior and senior members, and give facilities for their development and effective use.

Shanghai Conference

1. Mental and Spiritual Training in the Home Lands.

Before coming to China, there should be acquired a good knowledge of the Holy Scriptures themselves, as the outcome of the habit of devotional study. But this should be combined, as far as possible, with scholarly study of the text and substance. Emphasis should be laid upon the need of a tactful, sympathetic and accommodating spirit, in relations both with the Chinese and with fellow missionaries. Men should be sent out with a view to taking up some special branch of the work, for which they have received a thorough training. In all cases some practical experience should be gained in evangelistic work, seeing that every department of missionary activity has, as its main object, the leading of men to Christ.

2. The Study of the Chinese Language, History and Religions.

As a rule, we do not favour studying the Chinese language at home, except in cases where it can be done as a part of a man's university course. We do not think that a candidate should be delayed in coming out for this object; nor that his or her training in other respects should be diminished in order to make room for it. In some cases, however, there should be provided in schools at home courses of study which would give the intending missionary a clear idea of the history and main religious ideas of the people among whom he is to labour.

3. First Two Years for Language Study and Practical Experience.

All new missionaries, including those designated for institutional work, should have two years for study and for practical experience of life and work in close contact with the Chinese. The study is obviously necessary if a good start is to be made in the language; whilst the contact with the people is equally needful for gaining that personal touch and knowledge of the people at first hand which is essential if the missionaries are to do their best work later on, whether in educational or medical institutions or in any other form of missionary effort.

4. Union Language Schools Recommended.

We recommend union language schools for new missionaries. We do not, however, advise their being in them for more than six months or a year, at the outside, after which each worker had better proceed to a station of his own Mission, and spend the next year or eighteen months as outlined in the preceding paragraph. The home Boards should send out new missionaries early in the autumn in order that they may commence their studies at the language school simultaneously. In addition to the Union School which now exists at Nanking for teaching Mandarin, we think that a second school should be instituted for instruction in the Wu dialects. We recommend that this school should be at some inland city, it being desirable that new missionaries should, for a time, at any rate, have experience of life in an inland city.

5. Further Study for Older Missionaries.

Classes for study of the language should be held at different health resorts during the hot months of the year; while special courses of study and lectures, which have a bearing on missionary work in China, should be provided for missionaries when on furlough. Special training should be afforded to men of attested aptitude for literary work.

Tsinanfu Conference

1. Characteristics of an Efficient Missionary.

Inasmuch as emphasis seems sometimes to be laid on training more than on men, we state our conviction that the chief emphasis should be on the selection of the right men by the home Boards. An efficient missionary must be a man of high Christian character, devotion, zeal, energy, patience and good sense; he should be a man who can adapt himself to new conditions and is able to co-operate happily with others. Possessed of these, the greater his ability the higher his efficiency. The most efficient missionaries are men of rich Christian experience who also have special ability to preach, teach, organize, lead, heal, or to perform other missionary duties.

2. Subjects Demanding a Specially Wide Study.

Candidates for the China mission field should be expected to devote time to a specially wide study of general history, Church history, Chinese history, comparative religions, and a history of Christian missions.

3. Language Study.

We do not recommend the study of the language before arrival in China, as such study can be done better on the field in contact with the Chinese people, the time at home being devoted to what can be better done at home than in China. Before being sent to the mission field, however, the candidate should be tested as to his ability to acquire a language other than his own.

4. Constructive Oversight by a Senior Missionary.

We recommend that a missionary on arrival should be directly associated with a senior missionary who should be responsible for the direction of his studies and for his relations with the Chinese people.

5. Language Study in Groups.

In places where there are a number of young missionaries, the establishment of a class or school for study of the language may be advisable. We do not favour the establishment of a union language school in Shantung. It would be advisable to have Chinese Christians of culture and experience address such classes on Chinese customs, etiquette, etc., showing how the young missionary may most easily adjust himself to conditions of work in China.

6. Appointment of Missionaries for Limited Terms.

On the whole question of efficiency we recommend the consideration by the home Boards of the advisability of appointing missionaries in the first instance for a limited term of service, say of seven or eight years, so that a man may honourably retire or be retired at the end of this period. We consider as sufficient grounds for retirement:—

- (1) Inability to acquire a fair working knowledge of the language.

- (2) Failure to maintain good relations with the Christian and non-Christian Chinese with whom he comes in contact.
- (3) Failure to co-operate with his foreign colleagues.

7. A Larger Use of Chinese Workers.

We consider that the efficiency of the missionary body would be greatly increased by the employment of a larger number of qualified Chinese co-workers at adequate salaries.

Peking Conference

1. Education and Practical Experience of Candidates.

The missionary should get the very best possible training and education in the home countries and have as much practical experience as possible with reference to the line of work he or she is to take up on the mission field.

2. Study of the Chinese Language and Other Subjects.

The Chinese language can as a rule be better studied on the field. The time given to its study at home usually would be more profitably employed on other lines of preparation. But the study of mission history, biography and comparative religion may profitably be done before coming to China.

3. Guidance and Companionship of Senior Missionaries.

The newly arrived missionary should not be left entirely alone as regards foreign colleagues. He should be associated with at least one senior missionary for guidance and companionship. We recommend that two years be free for study.

4. Union Language School at Peking.

There should be a union language school located in Peking, to serve the area represented by this Conference.

- (1) This school should be under the competent foreign supervision of some one set apart to give all his time to this work.
- (2) There should be carefully selected Chinese teachers for the school and for individual instruction.
- (3) The students in this school should be subject to regular testing by competent and experienced examiners.

- (4) There should be adequate living accommodations for those wishing to attend the school. This involves the provision of hostel equipment either by purchase or by rental.

5. Language School Curriculum.

First and foremost should the chief emphasis be laid on the acquisition of the Chinese language, as spoken and written, with a good general knowledge of Chinese literature. In addition to this it is suggested that the following subjects be given place in the course of study:—

- (1) The country of China, its people, resources, etc., that is, the geography and history of China.
- (2) A study of Chinese religions existing in China, with the method of presenting Christianity.
- (3) History of Christian missions in China.
- (4) Business procedure and management, office organization and records.
- (5) Chinese etiquette.
- (6) Special attention should also be given to the current newspaper style.

6. Advanced Courses in Language and Literature.

It is considered desirable to arrange in such a school special courses of advanced study in language and literature for older missionaries. It is also recommended that where practicable missionaries arrange their work so as to return to the school at stated periods for completion of such advanced study and reading, and to stand a test in the same. Missionaries who cannot attend these advanced lectures could have the benefit of such a course by correspondence.

7. Special Aspects of Training for Medical Missionaries.

We recommend that medical missionaries should be encouraged to specialize in some subject with a view to teaching in our medical colleges. We also favour medical missionaries passing through a course of practical training in missionary service before coming to the field, and furthermore we recommend that medical missionaries be located for language study either where they can attend the language school or in centres where there already is a medical missionary.

Hankow Conference

1. General Preparation.

Whenever possible, a broad and thorough general education should precede special missionary preparation. A good Biblical training is indispensable for every kind of missionary work, and, in addition, sufficient theological instruction to ensure an intelligent understanding of the Christian faith. Moreover, it is extremely desirable, in fact necessary, that any man or woman who comes out as a missionary should have had personal and practical experience of Christian work at home.

2. Special Preparation.

Adequate special preparation for missionary work in China ought to include, besides language study, some education in the religions, history, literature, social institutions and national characteristics of the Chinese people, and some medical study for those who are to be sent to isolated stations. Where facilities for training in these and cognate subjects are better at home than on the field, they should be taken advantage of there.

3. Language Study at Home.

Every missionary should, if possible, have a course in the science of phonetics. Where a missionary candidate is at an educational centre in which there is a professor or competent teacher of Chinese, a year, or part of a year, should be spent in the study of the Chinese written language; but unless a Chinese teacher from the language area to which the candidate is going is available, only the meaning, and not the sounds of the characters, should be attempted.

4. Considerations of Prudence.

The utilization of special facilities for missionary training at home depends entirely upon the early and definite allocation of the candidate to his or her field. Mission Boards are urged to send out missionaries to study before they are appointed to definite work, and not to send men only to fill vacancies where the need of immediate work hinders preliminary study. The Boards are also requested to make arrangements for a period of thorough rest for newly appointed missionaries between the times of completing their training courses and of sailing.

5. Language Study on the Field.

There is ample evidence as to the need for and the great advantage of definite and skilled instruction in the language for new missionaries. Such instruction can best be given either in language classes or in a language school. There are good reasons for the establishment of a union language school in any centre where several Missions are at work. Such a language school, if once established, should, and naturally would, include instruction in the religions and history, the life and manners of the Chinese people, in mission methods and in kindred subjects. Owing to differences in pronunciation, we need, in addition to the Nanking School, two other schools for Central and West China, one at the Wuhan centre and one at Chengtu or Chungking. Until, and after, the establishment of such union language schools we urge the adoption of a common course of study and system of examinations on the part of the Missions concerned. Either in connection with such a language school or elsewhere, we recommend that special courses be provided for those who wish to pursue advanced studies in the language, literature and religions of the country.

6. Itinerant or Country Work under Supervision.

It is desirable that all classes of new missionaries spend some considerable time in itinerant or country work in association with more experienced Chinese or foreign workers during the first two years in China. Also, facilities should be afforded missionaries for visiting fields of other Missions in China.

7. Missionaries on Furlough.

Missionaries on furlough should have opportunity for post-graduate study in medicine, theology or education, and should also have a period of complete rest.

China National Conference

1. Characteristics of an Efficient Missionary.

An efficient missionary must be a man or woman of high Christian character, devotion, zeal, energy, patience and good sense as well as of sound physique; he should be a man who can adapt himself to new conditions and co-operate happily with others. Possessed of these qualifications, the greater his ability the greater will his efficiency be. The most efficient missionaries are men of rich Christian experience who also have special ability either to preach, teach, organize, lead, heal or to serve in some other form of missionary activity.

2. Selection of Missionaries.

We would lay supreme emphasis on the early selection by the home Boards of the right men and women, who have a divine call. Before being sent to the mission field candidates should be tested as to their ability to acquire foreign languages. A thorough education is essential in order to meet present conditions in China. We recognize, however, that exceptional cases may arise which cannot be brought under any rule.

3. Training at Home.

The home base can render greater assistance in the direction of helping intending missionaries to fit themselves to meet the peculiar conditions which obtain on the fields where they are to work, by making possible better preparation before coming to the foreign field.

(1) General training at home should include the following:—

- a. An education in all respects as complete as that required for the holy ministry, or for medical, educational or industrial service at home. In any case, all, whose courses have not included it, should be well grounded in Bible study.
- b. Experience in practical Christian and professional work.

(2) Special training at home should consist of the following studies:—

- a. Principles of language study and the science of phonetics
- b. The history of China, general history and church history.
- c. The religions of China, and comparative religion.
- d. Chinese sociology.

- e.* History of missions in China, and present mission problems.
- f.* As a rule the vernacular can best be learned in China, but where for any reason there cannot be organization for language instruction, advantage should be taken of facilities provided at home. Some study of the principles of the Chinese language and character might with profit be carried on at home.

4. Training on the Field.

The facilities for the training of missionaries on the field need immediate improvement.

- (1) General training on the field should follow these lines:—
 - a.* Two years should be allowed for a study of the language and for general preparation.
 - b.* Arrangements should be made by which all classes of missionaries may acquire experience in itinerant work.
 - c.* Advantage should be taken of every opportunity for contact with the Chinese in their daily lives, and for acquiring a knowledge of Chinese etiquette.
- (2) Special training on the field should include the following:—
 - a.* A mastery of the spoken language. This should be considered the first and foremost task of the new missionary.
 - b.* A study of the literary language sufficient to enable the missionary to read simple books and newspapers. Special training should be provided for men of literary aptitude.
 - c.* In non-Mandarin-speaking districts some study of the Mandarin dialect after not less than three years' study of the local dialect. The missionary body should prepare to meet the time when Mandarin will be in general use.
 - d.* A study of mission methods. Those methods that have been proved should be understood before any attempt is made to introduce new ones.

5. Language Schools.

We find that the Sectional Conferences call for language schools at the following centres: Peking, Nanking, Wuhan, Canton, West China and the region of the Wu dialects. Each of these schools should be under the charge of a competent missionary set apart for the purpose. There should be hostels provided for the missionaries to live in. The student should spend about six months in the school. Special courses should be provided for missionaries who wish to take advanced studies.

6. Missionaries on Furlough.

Missionaries on furlough should be given opportunities for special study, and care should be taken that they are given a sufficient amount of real rest. All missionaries on furlough should undergo a thorough physical examination as soon as possible after their return home.

7. Efficiency.

To prevent waste and to utilize the mission force to the best advantage certain additional recommendations are made. We would point out also that the mission body by reason of its numerical strength and accumulated experience is now better fitted to understand the needs and possibilities of the field, and that a larger proportion of administrative authority should therefore be transferred to it.

- (1) While boards should appoint candidates to definite fields, the local executive authorities should decide their final destination.
- (2) New missionaries should be required to take a period of rest before starting for their field of labour.
- (3) No definite mission responsibilities should be laid upon the new missionaries until the study period is finished.
- (4) We recommend to the consideration of the home Boards the advisability of missionaries being appointed in the first instance for limited terms of service. A missionary might then at the end of his period either honourably retire or be retired.
- (5) It is important that furloughs should not be unduly postponed from motives of economy. The difficulty of granting furloughs must be met by providing more adequate staffs and more frequent reinforcements.

Moukden Conference

(Not Discussed)

Seoul Conference

1. General Education and Religious Training.

It is assumed that a good general education and religious training has been acquired, together with a thorough knowledge of the English Bible.

2. Knowledge of Useful Handicrafts and of Business Methods.

Everyone should have practical knowledge of some useful handicraft, as well as some training in business methods. This training should have been of such a character as to familiarize the candidate with co-operative effort, and to develop in him habits of submission to authority.

3. Language Study and Language School.

The new missionary should acquire a knowledge of phonetics. He should be placed under the guidance of some earnest and efficient missionary for the first year or two, and should be given opportunities to attend a language school. We favour one language school where, under efficient teachers, new missionaries can be taught not only the language and script of the country but also its manners, customs and etiquette.

4. Safe-guarding the Time and Energy of Missionaries.

We urge the home Church to realize the importance of safe-guarding the time and energy of missionaries on the field:—

- (1) By providing adequate forces for each station.
- (2) By sending out men specially qualified for dealing with practical business matters.

Tokyo Conference of Missionaries

1. Special Preliminary Training.

Over and above the general equipment needful among an educated people, and assuming that some knowledge of Japanese history, religions and social polity, if not acquired beforehand, will be duly acquired on arrival, the special preliminary training for Japan most needing attention is in:—

- (1) Pedagogy, especially for educational workers.
- (2) The application of the Christian faith to social and industrial problems, which in the next decade will demand some workers of knowledge and enthusiasm.

2. Elimination of the Unfit.

Candidates, however zealous and well equipped, should be long enough under home training to allow the elimination of those who through a lack in the matter of adaptability, gentle manners or self-discipline are unfit for Japan.

3. Protecting the Period for Language Study.

New missionaries have in the past too often suffered from being sacrificed, during their first two years of language study, to the exigencies of existing work. Local temptation to this requires to be met by a strong public sentiment.

4. Japanese Language to be Studied Only on the Field.

The study of the Japanese language as a rule can be effectively undertaken only after arrival in Japan.

5. Union Language School.

Present experience demonstrates the importance of a union language school, this school to provide systematic courses of language study, and also lectures on Japanese history, religion, classical literature and related practical subjects, for those who are able to attend it.

Tokyo Conference of Japanese Leaders

1. Qualifications of a Missionary.

The matter of prime importance in the choice of a missionary is the selection of a man whose qualifications are sufficient to enable him to fill the position of a pastor and preacher in the home land. Besides having such qualifications he must thoroughly prepare and consecrate himself to the Master's service, and must have a great purpose and be able to say, like the Apostle Paul, "I become a Gentile unto the Gentiles." The missionary candidate, while receiving a theological training at home, should study, by some means, the present condition and the current thought of the Japanese people. New missionaries must be graduates of colleges, in good health, and young as to age.

2. Studying the Japanese Life and Language.

Every new missionary, as far as practicable, should work for the first year or two under the direction of some experienced Japanese pastor, and so get acquainted with Japanese church members and become familiar with their manners, customs and habits of thinking, as well as study the language. The standard of a missionary's acquired knowledge of language, especially for those who do direct evangelization, should be that he be able to read and understand Japanese newspapers and magazines.

3. Language Schools.

It is necessary to establish Japanese language schools for the missionaries of all denominations, for it is quite important for them to study the language regularly and systematically. There should be two such schools, one in the East and one in the West of Japan.

4. Japanese Religious History and Etiquette.

The missionaries residing in Japan should be familiar not only with the language but also with the outline of the history and with the religion of the people, and should be acquainted with the rules of etiquette.

5. Further Study for Older Missionaries.

It is quite desirable for all the missionaries who have already been in Japan for some years to study those subjects stated above. It will be profitable to utilize Karuizawa, the favourite summer resort, or some other central locality, and to invite some Japanese specialists to give courses of lectures on those subjects, so as to broaden the knowledge of missionaries. By this means, we think, the older missionaries will increase their usefulness, magnify their character and win a greater confidence from the Japanese. Thus it is very important for the old missionaries as well as for the new to study and increase their knowledge on these subjects.

6. The Children of Missionaries.

Lastly, we recommend our missionary brethren, as much as practicable, to train and consecrate their children who were born in Japan, and educated both in this country and in the home land of their parents, to the Lord's service in upbuilding His Kingdom in this country.

Japan National Conference

1. Preliminary Training Most Needed.

For work in Japan as thorough an equipment is needed as for parallel work in Christian lands. The special preliminary training most needed is in:—

- (1) Pedagogy, especially for Sunday school and educational work.
- (2) The application of Christian faith and thought to social and industrial problems, which in the next decade will demand some workers of special knowledge and enthusiasm. The previous training should also include some knowledge of Japanese history, religions and social polity, but the study of the language, as a rule, can be effectively undertaken only after arrival in Japan.

2. Elimination of the Unfit.

Candidates, however zealous and well equipped, should be long enough under home training to allow the elimination of those who, through lack of large sympathies, adaptability, gentle manners or self-discipline, are unfit for missionary work in Japan.

3. Union Language School.

Present experience demonstrates the importance of a union language school to provide systematic courses of study, including lectures on Japanese history, religion, literature, etiquette and related practical subjects, with extension courses for non-resident students. We would protest against the too common sacrifice of missionaries during their first two years of language study to the exigencies of practical work.

4. Continued Study After Examinations are Passed.

The training of missionaries should not end with the passing of their examinations. Old as well as new missionaries are urged to organize and use, at summer resorts or elsewhere, lectures by specialists in the subjects named in paragraph 3 above, and to pursue prescribed courses of reading. They should also keep in close touch with the thought life of Western lands by continued study and wide reading.

5. Association With Experienced Japanese Workers.

New missionaries as early as possible should be closely associated with experienced Japanese workers, thus acquiring familiarity with the people, their customs and their habits of thought.

6. Ability to Read Japanese Periodicals.

Ability to read Japanese newspapers and magazines is a valuable asset to all classes of missionaries.

7. Children of Missionaries.

Missionaries may render a great service by training and consecrating their own children, born and bred in this land, to the up-building of Christ's Kingdom in Japan.

VI
CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

VI. CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

In all India a little more than one seventeenth of the population can read and write, a disproportionate number being males, as only one girl or woman out of approximately 197 possesses those rudimentary accomplishments. Grants-in-aid here dominate the general policy of education and also greatly further the cause of missionary schools. In China an indeterminate number of schools of the new order have sprung into existence, and education is one of the central interests in that nascent republic. Its Ministry of Education, in September, 1912, stated the objective in these words: "The educational aim of the Republic of China is to pay special attention to the development of morals, supplementing it with technical and military training and completing it with a cultivation of the æsthetic powers." Japan ranks with the most literate nations of the Occident in its emphasis of education, 7,190,693 pupils and students being under instruction in 1910. Apparently the full quota of children of school-going age was in schools at that time, nearly six and a half millions of boys and girls. In Japan almost necessarily and in China according to the judgment of most educational missionaries, the governmental educational programme should be regarded by Christian educators. No grants-in-aid are given to make the arrangement financially helpful. In both countries religion has no place in the policies.

Yet the Far East, and to a less extent Southern Asia, are in a formative period when moral and religious factors are most important in the developing nations. Instead of an emphasis of these in government educational schemes, they are subordinated or excluded. Japan has recently come to feel the absolute need of religious elements in education, but faces the other horn of the dilemma in a tax-sustained system which makes it impracticable to introduce religious instruction—a day of opportunity for Christian schools, the Tokyo Conferences point out. Governmental support of education has so improved plants and methods, and has placed such relatively well-paid staffs in these schools, that Missionary Societies are put to the test as never before. Their institutions must be better supported, equipped, staffed and be made more effective, if they are to compete with governmental schools in which Christianity and even a strong attempt at character-building are absent.

The programmes of education as reiterated in these Conferences are broad and inviting to those who would give their lives to Church and nation building. Cultural values are emphasized in lands where a utilitarian view of education dominates; Christian studies and a Christian atmosphere, to be fostered in higher government institutions by hostels, are prominent; industrial education for rendering Christians independent, or even to send them forth to establish factories where Christianity shall reign; the fostering and great enlargement of institutions in which Asia's hitherto neglected but now emerging girlhood and womanhood may receive a practical, aesthetic and religious preparation for the home and for society; the insistence upon a better trained leadership for the Church, calling for an arts course and a thorough theological training extending in some recommendations even to the Hebrew and Greek originals of the Bible; the co-operation and union in most of the higher institutions, thus resulting in greater economy and efficiency, as well as in Christian unity: these are some of the features which look towards a better educated Christian community and to countries leavened by Christianity. The greater openness of the depressed classes in India and China's universal thirst for modern education, together with Japan's lack of Christian middle schools, are impressive appeals to the Christian student and the Christian Church.

There is one other human element which the Conferences reiterate. Trained educationists from Europe and America to educate a great multitude of Christian school teachers and professors are imperatively demanded in those eager lands. They should be "men and women filled with the missionary spirit and holding it as their highest aim to lead young people to consecrate their lives to the Master's service." Youth in the most plastic period of life are made, under these missionaries, "in faith, zeal and practice, pillars and leaders in the Church of Christ, irrespective of the calling or profession they will ultimately follow," the Korean Conference asserts.

Colombo Conference

1. Schools as Evangelistic Agencies.

This Conference, being profoundly convinced of the value of schools from a missionary standpoint, feels that the opportunities they offer for the evangelization of the country need to be more fully recognized and used, and that greater efforts should be made through the children attending them to reach and influence the homes to which these children severally belong.

2. Higher Education and Missionary Endeavour.

This Conference is of opinion that singular opportunities exist for the calling out and development of the missionary spirit in the various Christian schools and colleges in Ceylon. It would press on the attention of those responsible for them the encouragement it would give to the missionary cause if the training of Ceylonese missionaries were placed in the forefront of the objects for which such colleges exist; if special scholarships were founded for the help of those who have before them the object of qualifying themselves for missionary service, and if, wherever possible, each college were connected with, or engaged in, some definite missionary endeavour.

3. The Employment of Non-Christian Teachers.

The number of non-Christian teachers in mission schools is small. Most Missions report that all their teachers are Christian. Some Missions see no objection to the employment of catechumens as assistant teachers. Others report that the few non-Christian teachers are employed only in subordinate positions. The Conference learns with satisfaction that even this very limited employment of non-Christian teachers in mission schools is being discontinued.

Madras Conference

1. Elementary Education.

In view of the importance of elementary education as an evangelistic agency among the outcastes and the Sudras and of the necessity of providing such education for Christian children, the Conference strongly urges Missions to make use of the present favourable opportunity for increasing the number of elementary schools for boys and girls.

2. Training of Teachers.

There is at present a great lack of trained Christian teachers for schools both of the elementary and of the secondary grade. The Conference, believing that in training as in higher general education there is great need for united action, recommends that Missions should co-operate in establishing well-equipped training schools both for men and for women and asks the Missionary Council of Aided Education to consider in what centres such schools should be placed and to communicate their findings to the Missions working in the areas concerned.

3. The Staffing of Higher Educational Institutions.

The Conference, in considering the work of higher educational institutions, feels that it is urgently necessary so to increase the number of missionaries on the staff that they will be able to use the constant opportunities for personal work which their position as teachers affords, but which on account of lack of time and pressure of educational duties cannot now be utilized. Inasmuch as through understaffing the spiritual results of these institutions cannot be fully conserved, the Conference very earnestly commends this matter to the careful consideration of Mission Boards, as being one of vital importance.

4. The Hostel.

In the opinion of this Conference the hostel is invaluable as an aid to the Christian educational institution, but must not be regarded as a substitute for it except where such an institution is impossible.

5. Women's College.

In view of the need of higher education for women and in consideration of the facts that it is undesirable for women students to study in men's colleges and that college classes attached to high schools can at best be but a temporary arrangement, the Conference is of opinion that the need can be met only by united effort and recommends that the Missions of South India should co-operate in establishing in Madras a united Christian college for women at as early a date as possible.

6. Central Educational Council.

With regard to the existing Missionary Council of Aided Education, the Conference recommends:—

- (1) That it should be reconstituted as a committee in affiliation with the Federal Missionary Council [see under Co-operation].
- (2) That it should include an adequate representation of women educational workers for the purpose of co-ordinating and developing educational work among girls.
- (3) That its functions be enlarged so that it may make a complete educational survey of the field, offer suggestions to Missions regarding any educational problem in the area, and consider the feasibility of securing a missionary who shall devote his whole time to dealing with the missionary educational problems of South India.

Bombay Conference

1. Primary Aim of Missionary Education.

This Conference desires to affirm its conviction that now, as in the past, the primary aim of all missionary educational work is the definite conversion of individuals. It recognizes, at the same time, that in the effort to carry out this aim the important work of permeating the community with Christian ideals is also being accomplished, thus fulfilling the twofold expectation expressed by the early founders of educational missions.

2. Primary Schools for Girls.

Recognizing that there is an insufficiency of primary schools for Mohammedan girls with efficient Hindustani-speaking teachers, the Conference would urge that efforts be made to meet this need by opening small schools near Mohammedan homes, and that means be taken to have teachers trained for this purpose in Hindustani-speaking centres. Furthermore, with a view to the development of primary education among Marathi-speaking girls, the Conference would emphasize the need which exists for more thoroughly trained teachers.

3. High Schools for Indian Christians.

While this Conference believes that it is the duty of the Missions to maintain in highest efficiency the existing high schools, it holds that in any scheme for the expansion of the high school system a place should be found for high schools specifically intended for the education of Indian Christians.

4. Co-operation with Wilson College.

Wilson College, in the valuable service which for more than half a century it has rendered to the cause of Christian higher education in this Presidency, is carrying on a work from which all the Missions derive benefits, and offers its advantages to Christian students irrespective of their Church connection. This Conference, therefore, is of opinion that the various Missions should be invited to consider whether the time has not come for them to co-operate in the maintenance of this important institution. The Continuation Committee should be informed of any decisions at which they may arrive with reference to such co-operation, the need for which has been rendered more urgent by the increasing demands for the highest educational efficiency in the colleges affiliated to the universities of India.

5. A Women's College for Western India.

In view of the fact that in recent years, and especially in the current year, public attention has been largely directed to the question of the establishment of a women's college for Western India, this Conference is of opinion that the Missions should take the opportunity of considering whether it is not their duty to endeavour to meet this demand either by founding a women's arts college in which the full university course shall be taught, or else by providing instruction in certain branches only in a women's college working in association with existing institutions in which instruction in the remaining branches of the course can be made available. The Conference recommends that a women's college established in either of these forms should be definitely under Christian management and should be conducted as a residential college with attached hostels in which denominational instruction can be imparted as may be found necessary, such hostels to be available for women studying in any faculty.

6. Assistance for Students of Promise.

The attention of the Conference having been drawn in the course of several of the discussions to the fact that the number of Christian young men and young women going forward to a university education is comparatively small in this Presidency, and the conviction having been expressed that this is often due to their lack of means, this Conference deems it desirable that the Missions should make some kind of provision for assisting young men and young women of promise to proceed to the university. The Conference is further of opinion that in the educational and other departments of mission work appointments of responsibility should be open to such highly educated Indian Christians.

7. Missionary Educational Union.

The Conference recommends that a Missionary Educational Union be organized for this area. While believing that such a Union is calculated to be of great service to missionary education, the Conference is not prepared to recommend the creation of the post of Director of Missionary Education, as suggested in the syllabus of questions.

Jubbulpore Conference

1. Aims.

Without obscuring the work of educational missions as a force for evangelization and for permeating non-Christian society with Christian ideas, great stress must be laid upon its function in building up the Christian community.

2. Education of Christians.

With a view to making Christian education among Indian Christians more useful:—

- (1) In schools and colleges where Hindus and Mohammedans predominate special care should be taken that the interests of Christian students are not allowed to suffer.
- (2) More stress should be laid on well-considered industrial training as a means of producing an independent Christian community.

3. Religious Efficiency.

Every effort should be made to create in all our educational institutions a strong Christian atmosphere. With a view to this the following are desirable:—

- (1) A stronger Christian staff
- (2) More thorough religious and theological training of Christian teachers.
- (3) A more carefully devised and graded system of Bible teaching.
- (4) The gradual replacement of non-Christian by Christian teachers as soon as practicable.

4. Co-operation.

With a view to promoting co-operation in educational work, the following are recommended:—

- (1) The Missionary Educational Union should be developed and every Mission should be urged to give it hearty support.
- (2) This Union should undertake a survey of the educational field.
- (3) Greater care should be taken by all Missions to avoid duplication of higher institutions and whenever possible union institutions should be developed.

Allahabad Conference

1. The Spiritual Objective.

This Conference recognizes the three following principal aims as the spiritual objective of mission colleges:—

- (1) The development of strong and devoted Christians
- (2) The conversion of individual students.
- (3) The diffusion of Christian ideas as a preparation for the large influx that we believe is coming into the Christian Church.

2. Three Principles in College Evangelism.

This Conference recommends that three principles should be adhered to in the evangelistic work in our colleges:—

- (1) Close personal contact should be maintained between the Christian staff and students. Christian wardens should live in the hostels, and the proportion of students to members of the Christian staff should be not more than thirty to one.
- (2) Teaching should be concentrated on those aspects of the Christian faith that supply the corrective to the most antagonistic and harmful features of the Hindu and Mohammedan religions.
- (3) The help of men with the special gifts of the missionary should be enlisted, to try to bring to the point of decision those who have heard the call of Christ.

3. Separation of Christian Boys.

This Conference, recognizing the high standard attained in our Christian girls' schools where the girls are wholly separate from non-Christians, recommends a measure of such separation as desirable in the case of our Christian boys. This can best be secured by having all the Christian boys in a separate hostel, by massing them as far as possible in one section of a class, and, in the case of boys below the sixth class, by having them, where possible, taught entirely in the hostel.

4. Education of Village Christians.

We invite the attention of the Missionary Educational Union to the necessity of making adequate provision for the education of village Christians on lines of wider general usefulness.

5. Securing Christian Teachers.

While the proportion of Christian to non-Christian teachers varies in different schools and Missions, there is no question that the supply is not equal to the demand. This is partly accounted for by the small numbers of Christian students in these Provinces reading in the higher classes, and partly by financial conditions; and while the establishment of provident funds partially meets this latter difficulty, the real need can best be met by keeping constantly before Christian boys and girls the ideal of service.

6. Support of Federative Educational Enterprises.

We would urge that the Missionary Educational Union and the Teachers' Association for Girls' Schools be better supported by the various missionary bodies engaged in educational work.

7. Normal School for Christian Teachers.

This Conference refers the question of a normal school for Christian teachers to the Missionary Educational Union for decision as to whether a separate Christian normal school should be established or whether the Societies should unite to found hostels in connection with the government schools.

Lahore Conference

1. Elementary Education of Village Christians.

One of the most pressing of educational problems is that of the primary education of the children of the Church. As a result of the rapid ingathering from the depressed classes, the percentage of illiteracy has greatly increased. The attitude of the Government is at present such with regard to the whole question of elementary education as to indicate the possibility of large advances in the direction of providing educational facilities for our village people. This Conference, therefore, urges upon the several Missions the formation of such plans for dealing with this problem as shall be broad enough to provide adequately for the great numbers that are being gathered into the Church; and would further suggest the great importance of carefully correlating such primary education with the whole scheme of government and missionary education.

2. Training of Christian Teachers.

Our supply of Christian teachers is wholly inadequate. The Conference commends to the consideration of the Societies working in this area the possibility and desirability of co-operation in the work of training Christian teachers.

3. Staff and General Equipment of Mission Schools.

As in the past few years great advance has been made by government and non-Christian colleges and schools, as to both staff and general equipment, missionary institutions, if they are to regain and maintain the lead in general efficiency that they at one time had, must make very special effort. As the importance of this is emphasized by the obvious desirability of providing for the youth of the Church such educational facilities as will secure their presence in our institutions by the removal of all reasonable excuse for a resort to non-Christian schools and colleges, the Conference most strongly urges that the immense importance of this matter be brought before the Church in the West, that the urgency of the case may be recognized and the necessary funds and fully equipped teachers may be forthcoming to enable us to meet the peculiar situation of this time. In this connection the Conference also feels that, in order to attain the fullest efficiency, the number of teachers, foreign and Indian, engaged in our colleges and schools should be largely increased so that opportunities for personal work may be utilized by men who are not wholly absorbed in their educational duties. It is further recommended that mission schools and colleges be not multiplied more rapidly than they can be manned by Christian teachers.

4. A Central Committee on Missionary Education.

In view of the rapidly changing conditions of the times, a necessity has arisen for a thorough examination of Christian educational policy and equipment within this area. The adoption of a distinctive educational policy should be no longer delayed, if provision is to be made for the accomplishment of the task before us. This Conference, therefore, recommends the formation of a Central Committee on Missionary Education. It is recommended that the work of calling such a body into existence and of outlining its duties be referred to the Federal Council. [With reference to the Federal Council, see under Co-operation.]

Calcutta Conference

I. Aim of Christian Education.

It is the general feeling of this Conference that the primary aim of missionary education with regard to non-Christians should be the presentation of Christ to them with the object of individual conversion; but some prefer to express the aim more comprehensively as the presentation and development of the highest ideals of Christian life and character by means of Christian education.

2. Religious Instruction and the Spirit of Service.

This Conference recommends that in schools religious instruction should be given to Christians and non-Christians separately. In colleges it may be given to both together, provided that in addition Christian students get separate religious instruction. In view of the growing tendency among students towards a more elaborate and costly manner of living, every effort should be made to discourage extravagance in food and dress and to inculcate simplicity and economy. The spirit of service should be carefully cultivated throughout the whole school life.

3. Cultivating the Missionary Spirit.

This Conference feels that Christian boys and girls should be inspired with the desire of helping forward the evangelization of their country. Some organization should be established, in every high school at least, to enable young people to do this.

4. Financial Aid to Needy Pupils.

This Conference is strongly of opinion that Missions should aid Christian boys and girls to prosecute their studies in high schools only when it is quite clear that the parents or guardians of the child are unable to pay full fees and that the child has the capacity to profit by a high school education. When assistance is given by a Mission, the child should be taught that gratitude demands that some return be made for the support and education provided.

5. Special Aim in Educating Christian Girls.

This Conference expresses the opinion that the special aim of the education of Christian girls is to build up a Christian character and to train the girls for their future home life.

6. Practical Training for Home Duties.

This Conference feels that undue emphasis has been laid upon the literary side of education for girls, especially in primary schools, to the neglect of domestic arts. As the due performance of home duties is an essential part of a woman's life, in Christian primary schools such subjects as cooking, washing, nursing and housewifery might form part of the curriculum. This will not be altogether possible in high schools, but in them due emphasis should be laid on the proper doing of household duties as a necessary feature in the ideal of womanly character. Provision for such instruction as is possible should be made.

7. Domestic Science Courses and Government Grants.

This Conference feels sure that if a scheme for the instruction of girls in domestic duties in all grades of education were prepared and presented to the local Government unitedly by all Missions in their respective areas, such a scheme would meet with sympathy and aid.

8. Efficiency and Character in Teachers.

This Conference would urge that every effort be put forth to make educational institutions thoroughly efficient. As an aid to this, teachers should be encouraged to undergo training. In making new appointments, other things being equal, a trained teacher is to be preferred to an untrained one. In making choice of persons to be sent for training, personal character, religious and moral, should be a prominent factor. It is felt to be highly desirable that for primary school teachers, training should be in missionary institutions. In this matter, co-operation between Missions is feasible and desirable.

9. Christian Teachers for Christian Schools.

This Conference feels that, where possible, it is most desirable that only Christian teachers should be employed in mission schools. Considering the financial and other difficulties, the increased proportion of Christian teachers to non-Christian in boys' schools seems to this Conference satisfactory. Girls' schools are almost entirely staffed with Christian teachers.

10. Central Committee on Missionary Education.

This Conference cordially approves the establishment of a Central Committee on Missionary Education, indications of support by their Societies being given by various members. The functions of this Committee should include the obtaining and circulation of information on educational matters; the survey of the whole field; the indication of places where there is a waste of effort from overlapping, and where there seem to be promising openings for expansion; the formulation of a common educational policy for all Missions in this area; the making of representations to Government; and the arranging of occasional interchanges among members of the various teaching staffs. Its work should be consultative and advisory, and in no sense legislative or mandatory.

India National Conference

i. Important Developments Affecting Missionary Education.

This Conference notes three most important developments in India affecting the whole problem of missionary education:—

- (1) Under the blessing of God the missionary activities of the Church have resulted in very large accessions, mostly from the depressed classes, with a consequent marked diminution in the literacy of the Christian community as a whole. The result of our labours imposes upon us heavy responsibilities for the education of our members, the more so as the evangelization of India must to a growing degree become the charge of the Indian Church. This Conference is of opinion that this educational situation forms one of the most urgent problems in India today.
- (2) There has been a notable advance in the standards of higher education and a consequent increase in the cost of such education. This imperatively demands that authorities both at home and on the field should bend every energy to maintain higher standards both of educational and of religious efficiency in these missionary institutions.
- (3) There is a widespread demand for the extension of primary education throughout India, which, in conjunction with the present accessibility of the depressed classes to missionary effort, constitutes a call to the Church to provide, as rapidly as may be, a largely increased body of qualified teachers to enable it to seize this opportunity.

2. Need for Missionary Schools and Colleges.

In view of these considerations it is the deliberate conviction of this Conference that the need for missionary schools and colleges as a Christian agency was never greater than now.

3. Aims.

These mission schools and colleges have for their aims:—

- (1) The upbuilding of the Church through the training of the children and youth of the Christian community.
- (2) The conversion of individual students.
- (3) The diffusion of Christian ideas as a preparation for the large influx of converts which we believe is coming into the Christian Church.

4. A Trained Staff Essential.

Educational work demands that those appointed to it be especially equipped for such work.

5. Christian Efficiency.

In order to attain the fullest Christian efficiency in missionary institutions:—

- (1) The number of teachers, foreign and Indian, engaged in our colleges and schools, should be largely increased, so that they shall not be so entirely absorbed in their educational duties as to be precluded from close personal contact with their present and past students.
- (2) As soon as practicable non-Christian teachers should be replaced by Christian teachers.
- (3) All mission hostels should be under the charge of resident Christian superintendents thoroughly qualified by character to exert a strong spiritual influence.
- (4) All Christian teachers should be given a more thorough religious and Biblical training and special means should be taken to increase their practical usefulness as teachers of religion.
- (5) A more carefully revised and graded system of Bible teaching should be introduced.

- (6) Due proportion must be maintained between the number of effective Christian members of the staff and the number of pupils.
- (7) Special attention should be given to the provision of all the apparatus that is required for religious teaching, which provision should be as adequate as that which is made in respect of secular teaching.
- (8) From time to time the help of men with the special gifts of the missionary should be enlisted, with a view to bringing to the point of decision those who have heard the call of Christ in school or college.

6. The Education of Christian Youth.

With reference to the education of Christian youth in its various stages, this Conference is of opinion that:—

- (1) In the college grade they should mingle with non-Christians in class and in hostel.
- (2) In the high school stage they should mingle in class but live in separate hostels.
- (3) Although the conditions in different parts of India vary so widely as to make the application of any general rule impossible, total separation in the primary stage is the ideal to be aimed at.

7. Efficiency Rather than Numbers Desirable.

Since it is desirable to produce a profound Christian impression rather than a diffused Christian atmosphere, if the choice at any time should lie between more students and more efficient education, the latter should be unhesitatingly chosen.

8. Elementary Education for the Christian Multitudes.

Sustained efforts should be made for the formation of such plans for dealing with the problem of elementary education as shall be broad enough to provide education, at least in reading and writing, for the great numbers that are being gathered into the Church.

9. Call for a Better System of Primary Education.

Since the system of primary education for boys and girls as at present given does not adequately meet the needs of our Christian community, there is a call to missionary educationists for constructive work in the way of devising a system more practical and better suited to the needs of the Church and locality.

10. The Present Favourable Opportunity.

In view of the increased attention which is at present being paid to primary education this Conference strongly urges Missions to avail themselves of the present favourable opportunity for increasing the number of their elementary schools for boys and girls, in so far as Christian teachers are available.

11. Training of Teachers.

In consideration of the fact that the supply of Christian teachers is wholly inadequate, more especially for primary but also for secondary education, this Conference recommends:—

- (1) That Missions co-operate in establishing well-equipped training schools both for men and for women, or in establishing hostels in connection with government training schools.
- (2) That every legitimate effort be made to make the teaching profession attractive by ensuring reasonable permanence of appointment, promotion, salary and provision for old age.

12. New Government Policy.

This Conference recommends that in view of certain new departures in educational policy announced by Government, as for example, the proposal to create a number of residential teaching universities and to establish model high schools for each district, the National Missionary Council [see under Co-operation] enter into correspondence with the Provincial Educational Unions of the separate areas and invite them to direct their attention to these matters in so far as they are likely to affect the interests of missionary education in the provinces concerned.

13. Co-operation.

Recognizing the many advantages of co-operation in all branches of higher education and the probable increase in the cost of such education in the future, this Conference is of opinion that Missions should in an increasing measure combine in instituting and maintaining colleges, normal and training schools and theological colleges. In particular, co-operation is urgently needed in order to maintain one woman's college in each province in which a demand for such a college exists.

14. Missionary Educational Union.

This Conference recommends that in each area a Missionary Educational Union, in which women's work shall also be represented, be organized as a committee of the Provincial Representative Council for that area. Its functions should include: the obtaining and circulating of information on educational matters; the survey of the whole educational field; the indication of places where there is waste of effort from overlapping, or where there seem to be promising openings for expansion; the formulation of a common educational policy for all Missions in the area; and the making of representations to Government. The work of this Union should be consultative and advisory and in no sense legislative or mandatory.

Rangoon Conference

1. The Aims of Christian Education.

This Conference recognizes as the aims of Christian education:—

- (1) The conversion of the pupil.
- (2) The formation of a Christlike character.
- (3) The training of Christian leaders for the Church and society.

2. The School as an Evangelistic and Upbuilding Force.

We record with deep gratitude the rich blessings that have been granted to the work of Christian education in Burma. Hitherto the Lord hath helped us, yet we find in this our warrant for seeking to emphasize in still larger measure the religious side of the work in order that we may make full use of the school as an evangelistic and upbuilding force.

3. Teacher Training for Religious Instruction.

We find that in order to ensure the efficiency of the religious work, special attention should be given to the training of teachers in methods of religious instruction, in order that the Bible may be as efficiently and scientifically taught as the secular studies.

4. Ensuring Continued Progress.

The success of the past, and such favourable conditions as a literate people, absence of caste, and the freedom of the women of the races of Burma, not only justify but demand an increased effort in Christian education that will ensure its continued progress. In this connection, with highest appreciation, we wish to call attention to the very friendly and generous support given to aided and mission schools by the Government of Burma.

5. Needed School Literature.

There is a great lack in the vernaculars of text-books for religious instruction, and of other suitable literature for the use of the young, and such a literature should be provided adapted to the different grades of the school.

6. A Central Advisory Committee for Education.

The interests of Christian education would be effectively served by the formation of a Central Advisory Committee representing the Societies working in this province, and we recommend that early steps be taken to establish such an educational committee as a sub-committee of the Council of Christian Missions in Burma.

7. A United Christian College.

One of the fields open for enlarged effort in Christian education in Burma, the field of higher Christian education, specially merits careful consideration, and its interests might best be served by one united Christian college. We find that this subject calls for the most mature consideration.

Singapore Conference

I. Two Distinct Fields.

This Conference finds that there are two distinct fields: the Dutch East Indies, and the British Colonies and Protectorates. In the Dutch Indies the principal educational work has been in the vernacular languages, but in response to the urgent demand of the people, work in Dutch and English is being started. The vernacular work has been very fruitful in converts. The Christian result of the Dutch work cannot yet be judged. In the British field the work has been almost entirely in English. There are not as abundant results as we long to see, but there are indications that good, though inadequate, Christian work is being done which will eventually bear much fruit. In both fields there is urgent need of workers who shall give their whole working time to the Christian and social sides of the work among pupils and former pupils of the English and Dutch schools.

2. The Dutch Field.

As the question of education in the Dutch East Indies is far too extensive to be dealt with without special detailed knowledge of the subject, and as the Dutch members declared themselves incompetent to cover the whole field, the Conference thinks it wise to publish no findings about the Dutch East Indies.

3. English Education in the British Field.

This Conference finds that the great demand for English education has necessitated the concentration of all educationists in English work, and the inadequacy of the staff at our disposal and the urgency of the demand for English has resulted in partial neglect of the higher educational aims and of Christian training. There is a pressing need for teachers who can give their whole time to organizing the definite Christian work of the schools.

4. Evangelistic Work Among Former Pupils.

The Conference desires to direct the attention to the unique opportunity for evangelistic work among "old" boys and girls from mission schools. The need for work among such former pupils is of pressing urgency, and the Conference hopes that serious effort will be made to meet the need.

5. Training of Teachers.

This Conference finds that the present training given to our local teachers is inadequate, but that this inadequacy is due to unavoidable causes. The chief of these has been the greatness of the demand for trained teachers. The Conference is unable to present a unanimous opinion on the best solution of this difficulty, but believes that the solution is either:—

- (1) That a well-equipped union Christian training school for teachers with denominational hostels be opened in Singapore; or,
- (2) That the secular work of the training be left to the Government, and that the Missions supplement this training by the formation of hostels to which all religious teaching should be left.

6. Representation to Government.

Recognizing the importance of this matter, this Conference recommends that a representation of the urgent need of provision for the proper training of teachers be made to the Government of the Straits Settlements, with a view to securing more definite and speedy solution of this pressing problem, and appoints Rev. W. G. Shellabear, Rev. J. Romanis Lee and Rev. W. Murray to make this representation to Government.

7. Girls' Schools.

There is an increased demand for the education of girls. It is desirable that their education include such subjects as domestic economy.

8. Vernacular Work.

This Conference finds that there is a call for work in the vernacular for certain Chinese and Tamils now in our English schools. In Borneo a similar call exists for work among Dyaks and other tribes. With the present staff it is impossible adequately to respond to the call, but as a temporary expedient it might be possible to take up a certain amount of vernacular work in the higher standards.

9. Unsupplied Needs.

This Conference finds that mission school work in English touches directly only a small though influential part of the population. There is an opening for vernacular work in Tamil, but it cannot be met adequately without more workers. The Malays are practically untouched.

10. General.

Finally, this Conference recommends that, when a Council of Missions is formed, it should appoint a sub-committee for Education.

Canton Conference

1. Need of a Strong Forward Movement.

In view of the present rapid growth of the Church and the spread of Western ideas, and of the inadequate Christian educational work in these three provinces, there should be an immediate and strong forward movement.

2. Aims of Mission Education.

Our aims must be clear. Mission institutions in general fall into five classes, each with a fairly well-defined aim:—

- (1) Hospitals, dispensaries, schools for the blind, asylums for the insane, missions for lepers, etc., which are the natural expression of Christian sympathy for suffering mankind and of a desire to bring to all relief, joy, salvation and opportunity for service.
- (2) Lower and higher elementary schools, whose aim is Christian nurture for the young, endeavouring to surround them in childhood with an atmosphere of Christian truth and love.
- (3) Middle schools, whose aim is to present effectively by clear message and intimate contact the commanding ideal of consecration to the service of God and man.
- (4) Colleges of arts and sciences, medical colleges, agricultural schools, etc., whose aim is to send Christian leaders of spiritual power and of missionary spirit into all honourable professions.
- (5) Theological colleges, Bible training schools and normal schools, and such courses in other schools, whose aim is to train for definite forms of church and mission service.

3. The Placing of Lower and Higher Elementary Schools.

There should be generally speaking, a lower elementary school in every village congregation and a higher elementary school with boarding accommodation in every centre where there is a sufficient constituency. These schools should follow the government course of study, with the addition of the teaching of the Bible, according to the plans of the local educational associations, and they should in most cases be almost immediately supported and controlled by the Chinese.

4. One Middle School for Each Prefecture.

In view of the present neglect of middle school education and of its great importance to the Church, there should be established as soon as possible at least one middle school in each prefecture. The minimum number of college-trained teachers in such a school should be four. Since it is to these schools that we must look for our preachers and teachers, their immediate establishment is of pressing importance. In order that we may have specially trained teachers, courses in psychology, pedagogy and practice teacher training must be given.

5. Union University Colleges at Canton and Foochow.

There should be developed in Canton and Foochow university colleges, at least those of arts and sciences, of medicine and of theology. In each centre these colleges ought to be, if possible, on the same grounds. Each group should be union in character and controlled by a special board.

6. Co-education in Lower Elementary Grades Only.

Girls may be educated in the same lower elementary schools with boys, but above that grade girls should have their own schools and these should be developed according to a policy practically the same as that for boys and young men.

7. A Union Theological School for Canton.

In view of the fact that representative men from nine Missions present in this Conference have stated their desire to unite in theological work in Canton, that two others have stated that their difficulties lie chiefly with their Boards, and that the Young Men's Christian Association and the Canton Christian College will certainly make every effort to feed such an institution, a member of this Conference has been chosen to convene a committee of representatives from the various Missions to take the matter seriously under consideration. Each Society is urged to set a man free for such work, to furnish the necessary funds and to place the management of the school entirely in the hands of a local board. The entrance requirements should be a middle school certificate, and all lower-grade theological training should be done entirely separate from this institution.

8. Trained Educationists Called For.

In view of the small number of trained educational missionaries, especially men, and of the consequent weakness of the machinery which has been created for co-ordinating and improving the Christian educational work of these provinces and for raising the standards of Chinese teachers, we urge the Boards to send out trained educationists, men and women, filled with the missionary spirit and holding it as their highest aim to lead young people to consecrate their lives to the Master's service.

9. Increased Chinese Control.

We should take a lesson from some of our Missions in their policy of finding strong Chinese, of relating them to the best opportunities, and of throwing upon them increased responsibilities in an atmosphere of increased sympathy. Chinese control should not necessarily be in proportion to Chinese support, and responsibilities placed upon Chinese co-workers should keep a little ahead of our estimates of their capacities. Teachers should be paid sufficient to give them self-respect, a feeling of independence, an opportunity for self-improvement and the full respect of all.

10. Higher Schools as Centres for Evangelistic Endeavour.

Educational institutions should be more closely in touch with evangelistic work, encouraging the students to carry on through their own organizations constant evangelistic work and to win volunteers for life service, and forming vacation evangelistic bands to work with missionaries and pastors. These institutions should also be centres for reporting evangelistic needs and encouragements, they should send out their teachers and students to assist the Churches and schools by lectures and preaching and should keep in close touch with the work of the Churches and Missions.

11. Christian Hostels.

Christian hostels should be provided in large student centres, especially for students of Hongkong University and of provincial government colleges.

12. Keeping in Touch with Former Students.

Special attention is called to the necessity of keeping in touch with those who have gone out from the schools, in order to conserve and use their power for good.

13. Manual Training and Central Industrial Institutes.

In view of the imperative need and boundless opportunity of industrial expansion in China, and further in view of the dependence of this development upon manual training in schools, and the unusual opportunities that such training affords for personal contact, one or more large central industrial institutes should be established in China, especially adapted to the training of Chinese teachers of industrial arts and crafts; and our Christian schools and colleges should give diligent attention to this important department of education.

Shanghai Conference

I. The Ultimate Aim of Christian Education.

The ultimate aim of all our educational work is the development of Christian character, thus helping to produce leaders in Church and State. We believe that more rapid progress can be made towards this end, and the percentage of Christians among our students be increased by:—

- (1) Closer and more systematic fellowship between Christian teachers and students.
- (2) Such an increase of the teaching force as will make this possible.
- (3) The organization of Christian students in personal work, and of all students in social service.
- (4) The holding of special services for the purpose of leading students to accept Christ and definitely to consecrate their life-work to Him.

2. Requisites to High Efficiency.

In order that our educational institutions may make an effective appeal for the cause of Christ and may, in view of the rapid development of the government educational system, maintain their standing, the quality of the work done must be of the highest order. This will necessitate specially qualified teachers, and adequate equipment and endowment for institutions of higher grade.

3. Conformity to Government Educational Standards.

We recommend conformity as far as practicable to the curricula and regulations of the government educational system. We consider government recognition desirable, and request the Executive Committee of the (Christian) Educational Association of China to take steps at their discretion towards this end.

4. Chinese Representatives on Educational Boards.

We recommend equal representation of Chinese and foreigners on the Boards controlling our educational work.

5. The East China Educational Commission.

We approve the purpose of the East China Educational Commission (now composed of representatives of nine Missions) and its efforts towards federation and union, and recommend that all other Missions be urged to appoint representatives on this Commission, and that the Commission take steps to have women representatives appointed, thus making it a fully representative body for the consideration of the whole educational problem of this area.

6. Proposals for Consideration.

We recommend to the East China Educational Commission the desirability of the following:—

- (1) A general survey of the field.
- (2) The standardization of all our educational work.
- (3) At least one union university.
- (4) One women's college.
- (5) Normal training schools in connection with each of the above mentioned institutions.
- (6) Federation or union of the existing institutions of college and high school ("middle school") grade.

- (7) Adequate supervision of intermediate and primary schools.
- (8) Incorporation of manual training in schools up to and through the high school ("middle school") grade.
- (9) An industrial institute with special emphasis on industrial normal training.
- (10) Employment of a secretary to give his whole time to the work of this Commission.

Tsinanfu Conference

1. General Aim.

The general aim of educational missionary work is by means of a liberal education under Christian directors to train the minds and hearts of the children of Christians and others that by life and testimony they may give the more intelligent witness and service to Christ as Saviour of the world.

2. Relations to Government.

We recommend that in all things that are not opposed to Christianity missionary education should closely conform to the government course. We further recommend that the National Conference be asked to consider whether the time has not come when the Government should be approached with a view to securing official recognition and equal rights for all mission schools which have reached the required standard.

3. Normal, Technical and Industrial Schools.

We recommend the establishment of more normal, technical and industrial schools, and in order to ensure their efficiency we appeal for men who have received special training in these subjects, and we also suggest the sending of students to the West for the same purpose.

4. Union in Higher Education.

We recommend the plan of union in higher educational work which is in operation in the Shantung Christian University.

5. One Christian University with Affiliated Colleges.

We believe that one Christian university with separate colleges for men and women is sufficient for Shantung province; and we recommend that where schools of a less advanced grade are or may hereafter be established at other centres they be affiliated with the university.

6. Share of the Chinese in Educational Administration.

Although the Chinese contribute very little to the support of the higher educational work in Shantung, yet for several years they have fully shared in the management of each of the colleges, and at its last meeting, the University Council, which has hitherto consisted of foreigners only, decided to add an equal number of Chinese with equal authority to its ranks. This action only awaits the ratification of the uniting Missions and of the home Boards before coming into operation.

7. Central Committee of Missionary Education.

We recommend the establishment of a Central Committee of Missionary Education in order to unify our educational activities.

8. Study of New Testament Greek in Theological Colleges.

In order that a really high standard of theological education may be attained in the Chinese Christian ministry, and that the Chinese themselves may be prepared to undertake Bible translation, this Conference feels that the study of Hebrew and Greek should be introduced into theological colleges. The Conference, however, feeling that it is wiser to take one step at a time, recommends that the language of the New Testament be first introduced. We recommend that students who are taking the full course in an arts college, and who propose, after graduation, to enter the ministry, be required to begin the study of Greek during the last two years of their arts college course, so as to be able to take full advantage of the study of the New Testament on entering upon the theological course.

9. Strengthening of Theological Curricula and Faculties.

This Conference, while highly appreciating the good work already done in the theological colleges in Biblical theology, apologetics and actual preaching, yet ventures to suggest that further development in the teaching of these subjects is called for in view of the special needs of the times, and of the high intellectual attainments of many of the candidates now offering for the ministry. In order to strengthen the faculties of theological colleges, Chinese pastors should be added thereto as soon as suitable men can be found.

Peking Conference

1. Aims of Christian Education.

The aims of Christian education are the fostering of Christian character and spiritual life in the young; the preparation of students for special service in the Church as preachers, teachers, etc.; and the training of all Christians to use their vocations, whether professional, commercial, industrial or domestic, for the welfare of the people in the spirit of Christ.

2. Definite Educational Policies Needed.

We urge the adoption by all Missions of definite educational policies in which the following principles are recognized:—

- (1) Education of all grades for boys and girls.
- (2) Systematic courses of study which shall be graded and correlated from lower to higher departments and standardized as the result of mutual agreement between the various Missions.
- (3) Schools of higher grade organized on a union basis.

3. Institutions Essential to the Christian Propaganda.

We regard the existence of the following institutions as imperative:—

- (1) In each province, or other natural division: colleges of arts and science; normal schools for men and women; Bible institutes for the training of men and women as evangelists; Christian medical colleges in certain important centres.
- (2) In Peking, a union university for the post-graduate studies as mentioned in paragraph 9 below.

4. An Advisory Committee for Education.

We recommend the organization of an advisory committee representing the Chinese and foreign workers interested in education in this district. This committee should meet at least once a year to consider means to promote educational efficiency, such as the following:—

- (1) Courses of study
- (2) Inspection of schools.
- (3) Relations to the Government.
- (4) Educational conferences.

5. Educational Efficiency and Religious Efficiency.

The Conference is convinced that educational efficiency and religious efficiency are so inter-related that they must be discussed together. We would therefore emphasize the following principles:—

- (1) One of the prominent aims of our Christian schools is the training of Chinese youth for leadership in Christian work. The present times in China demand that Christian leaders should be men whose education is fully equal to that of the scholars and statesmen who are building up the new China. These considerations make it imperative that educational and religious efficiency be together conserved and promoted.
- (2) This must also be the case if our Christian schools are to exercise their widest influence in moulding social and national life. If our schools attain educational efficiency without emphasis on morality and religion, they have no special sphere different from that of government schools. If they attain moral and religious efficiency but are lacking in educational results, they will be limited in their ability to impress the message of Christianity upon national life.

6. More Adequate Support of Educational Work Essential.

The above principles emphasize the need of a more adequate support of educational work, both on the part of the Missionary Societies and of the Chinese Christian communities. The following requirements must be met:—

- (1) The equipment, courses of study and methods of instruction in all schools must conform to the highest standards, not only for the sake of educational results, but also for the sake of moral and religious influence.

- (2) The members of the teaching staffs should be chosen both for their educational qualifications and for their Christian character, and their numbers should be sufficient to provide not only for routine instruction but also for that study of educational processes and results which alone can ensure progress, and for that personal acquaintance and intercourse with individual students which is necessary for the moral, religious and vocational guidance of the students.

7. Relations to Government Educational Work.

We feel that it is desirable to keep in the closest possible touch with government educational work, following the curricula of the government schools so far as these accord with our special purposes; promoting friendly intercourse by means of lectures, athletic contests, etc.; meeting with government teachers to discuss subjects of mutual interest, and looking forward to entering into closer relation with the national system whenever, and in so far as, it becomes feasible.

8. The Question of Hostels.

In order to encourage the most comprehensive union effort in Christian education, we recommend that in connection with all union educational institutions an opportunity be given to any Christian body to erect hostels and to provide special religious instruction for its students. Also that the question of hostels in connection with government institutions be taken under consideration.

9. A Union University at Peking.

Having in mind the educational needs of the eight provinces of this district, and the unparalleled opportunity for educational leadership now before the Christian forces in China, we strongly recommend the organization of a union university of large resources and high standards at Peking. This university should provide graduate schools of theology, medicine and education and other departments of special and technical subjects.

10. Strengthening the Theological Colleges.

In view of the great changes and new opportunities in China at the present time, we recommend that existing theological colleges be strengthened in every possible way and that when the union university is organized, its theological department should not be inferior to those of the best Western institutions.

11. Adequate Provision for Normal Training.

Adequate provision should be made for normal training for both men and women and of two grades, namely, for teachers of primary and for those of secondary schools. We are further of opinion that women teachers may be advantageously employed in primary schools far more than in the past.

12. Adapting Curricula to the Needs of Pupils.

We believe that in general our curricula should be adapted to the social and vocational needs of the pupils and especially that in schools and rural districts the education should be designed to interest them in the life of the community and should fit them to raise it to a higher level industrially and socially.

Hankow Conference

1. Relations to Government.

It would be well for Christian schools to arrange their curricula in harmony with the government system, in order to indicate in all ways our desire to further the purposes of national education. These schools should also use every opportunity to cultivate friendly co-operation with government schools.

2. Pedagogical Science Necessary for Future Efficiency.

The future efficiency of Christian schools demands that they should provide for the training of efficient primary teachers by suitable normal schools and by vacation classes, and that they urge the advisability of Missions sending students and untrained teachers to such schools and classes. Moreover, Christian high schools and colleges should offer instruction in the art of teaching.

3. More Emphasis on Education of Girls.

The education of girls is of equal importance with that of boys, and there should be proportionately far more emphasis than there now is on the development of girls' schools.

4. The Kindergarten.

Kindergarten schools have been unwisely neglected, and more such work should be immediately undertaken.

5. Union in Higher Education.

There is an urgent need for the different Missions in Hupeh to unite to carry out higher educational work of university grade. While there is scope for separate secondary schools already established, the number of students taking university courses is limited, and the carrying on of this work must be so expensive both in men and plant that it will tax the united resources of all the Missions to meet it. While much can be done by the co-operation of the Missions now in the field, their educational reinforcement by such a project as the Universities' Scheme, with the larger facilities thus afforded for post-graduate and professional studies, is urgently desired.

6. A Union Medical College for Wuhan.

It is advisable for the Missions at work in the provinces of Hupeh and Hunan to unite in the formation of a strong union medical missionary college in the Wuhan center. If a union Christian university is established in Wuhan, this medical college should be incorporated with it.

7. Union Theological Colleges.

A high standard of theological training can best be obtained in union theological colleges of university standard.

8. Inspectors of Primary Schools.

The Missions should be urged to appoint foreign or Chinese inspectors of primary schools, and where possible in union.

9. Educational Association Meetings.

It is recommended that the Educational Association of China should hold its triennial meetings during the school vacations, so as to enable those connected with schools in the interior to take a more active part in the work of the Association.

10. Place of Parents in Christian Education.

While Christian schools will always aim to cultivate genuine religious life, the education of children cannot be left to schools alone. The heads of Christian families should be taught the duty of instructing their households through family prayer and Bible study, parents should be taught to co-operate with the schools in training the children to good habits, and the schools should set an example of discipline and regularity.

China National Conference

NOTE.—Generally speaking, it is to be understood that the recommendations of this section apply also to the education of girls and women.

1. Aims and Essentials in Christian Education.

The aim of Christian education is the development of Christian character in all who come within its reach, the training of youth for lives of the highest social usefulness and the production of Christian scholars and of Christian leaders in Church and State. To this end two things are essential: a thoroughly Christian atmosphere, and the highest educational efficiency in all our institutions. We firmly believe that evangelistic and educational work are both included in our Great Commission, and that the success of evangelistic work largely depends on the efficiency of educational work, and that to secure such efficiency union is highly desirable.

2. Relation to the Government.

It is desirable to keep in the closest possible touch with the educational work of the Government, and the Churches' educational institutions should follow the government curricula as far as is possible without prejudice to our special purposes. We believe that government recognition of mission schools and colleges is in itself much to be desired, and we would urge the Educational Association to appoint a special committee to watch for a favourable opportunity for presenting our claim to such recognition to the Government, such committee to include both Chinese and foreign members.

3. Higher Education.

The present condition of China, the momentous political and social changes now taking place, together with the great and increasing demand for Christian leadership in these crucial times, create an opportunity unparalleled in the history of Christian Missions. The vastness of the country and the deep interest of the Chinese people in education call for immediate and great enlargement of all our higher educational work. We believe it to be providential that prosperous colleges have already been established at strategic points: at Moukden, Peking and Tsinanfu (temporarily located at Weihsien, Shantung), in the North; at Shanghai, Nanking, Wuhan and Changsha, in Central China; at Foochow and Canton in the South, and at Chengtu in West China. These institutions have proved their right to existence and support by their marked success, by the high character of the work they have done and by the influence they already exercise. We recommend, therefore, that at all these centres colleges be promptly developed and adequately maintained as university colleges, on a union basis if practicable. We recognize the excellent work already developed at several other places, and urge that these colleges be well supported and be affiliated with the university colleges at the nearest centre. We urge further, that the Christian Church should contemplate the early development of three or four, if possible, of these institutions,—one in the North, one in the West, one in the South and one in the East,—into Christian universities with facilities for graduate and advanced professional studies equal to those of the universities of the West.

4. Higher Education for Women.

Inasmuch as the Government is especially emphasizing education for women, we believe that in certain places where higher education is developed for men, similar work, not inferior in scope or quality, but not in all cases on the same lines of specialization, should be developed for women. These institutions should not, however, be co-educational.

5. A General System of Christian Education.

We are firmly convinced that more emphasis should be placed on the development of elementary schools, and that all our schools should be correlated in a general system of education leading up to the university. Therefore, generally speaking, there should be:—

- (1) A lower elementary school and kindergarten in connection with every Christian village congregation.
- (2) A higher elementary school with boarding accommodation in every centre where it seems desirable. The work of these schools should be determined by the local educational association on uniform lines, and they should, as soon as possible, be supported and controlled by Chinese.
- (3) Further, since it is in the middle schools that young people are most open to appeals to accept Christ as Lord and Saviour, and definitely to consecrate their lives to Him, we would urge that special attention be paid to Christian schools of this grade.

6. Efficient Foreign Staffing.

The number of educational missionaries should be largely increased in order that existing institutions may be more adequately staffed, also to provide for new schools of elementary and middle grade, and to secure that in every institution the staff may have time for personal contact with their students, for we believe such contact is the most effective means of influencing character. Although it is true that in our elementary schools the actual teaching will be done almost entirely by Chinese teachers, there is yet a real need of a limited number of foreign as well as Chinese teachers capable of organizing and supervising groups of schools. We recommend that, where possible, elementary schools be grouped so as to permit of union supervision, alike in the interests of economy and of efficiency. Such supervisors should have had definite training, and if it can be so arranged, some experience of teaching, before coming to China. Missionary educators should not only possess scholarship that will command the confidence and respect of the Chinese, they should also be men and women of strong personality, able to be real Christian leaders of their students. We recommend that the Mission Boards arrange for educational missionaries on furlough to have suitable opportunities for studying the best educational methods, and of taking courses in educational training.

7. Competent Chinese Teachers.

If our institutions are to be, as they must be, thoroughly efficient, special emphasis must be laid upon training competent Chinese teachers. We therefore recommend:—

- (1) Vacation courses and educational institutes for training those who are already engaged in teaching.
- (2) Normal schools, attached to middle schools, for training teachers for elementary schools. (Where possible the normal training might be part of the curricula of middle schools.)
- (3) Strong educational faculties in connection with colleges and universities, for the training of teachers for middle schools and colleges, and for post-graduate work.
- (4) That in all our training of teachers special emphasis be laid on proficiency in Chinese, and that some teachers should have training in more practical subjects, such as manual work, agriculture and (for women) domestic science.
- (5) That strong emphasis be laid upon the development of Christian character and gifts of leadership in our teachers, so that they may be able to inspire their students with high ideals of life and service.

8. Theological Education.

In view of the fact that the Chinese Church will be called upon to confront the attacks not only of Oriental philosophy but also of Western materialism and agnosticism, it is of prime importance that we train up men of the highest theological and philosophical scholarship, competent to do the work of Christian apologists in China. We are convinced that the best results in theological study will be obtained by promoting union or co-operative efforts in theological colleges of university standard. We would recommend:—

- (1) That before entering on their three-years' course in theology, it is very desirable that students should take the complete arts course; and that, where this is impossible, at least two years' work in the arts course (or its equivalent) should be required.

- (2) That, with a view especially to enabling our Chinese brethren hereafter to undertake for themselves the work of Bible translation, etc., wherever possible the study of Hebrew and Greek, or of one of those languages, should be introduced into our theological training as elective subjects. Where this is done, we would further recommend that the study be begun during the last two years of the student's arts course.

9. Bible Training Schools.

Inasmuch as there will always be a demand for less highly trained men in the evangelization of China, we recommend the establishment of well-equipped union Bible training schools, preferably associated with union theological seminaries.

10. Christian Medical Colleges.

We recommend the establishment and thorough equipment of Christian medical colleges on the lines adopted by the China Medical Missionary Association.

11. Manual Training.

We would call attention to the value of manual training and other hand-work in schools up to and including those of middle school grade. We recommend the establishment of special industrial courses, or even of industrial schools, wherever desirable. We regard this as a field where Chinese initiative may be employed with special advantage.

12. Methods of Union.

We believe that union educational work among different Missions may be developed on either of two lines, by common or federated colleges or by the hostel system, and we cordially recommend both of these methods.

13. Hostels Attached to Government Institutions.

We believe that while it may not as yet be always possible to establish such hostels, there are even now opportunities for doing so which should be seized without delay; and we would specially recommend this branch of work to the Young Men's Christian Association, and to individual Missions.

14. The Educational Association of China.

We urge that the (Christian) Educational Association of China should be warmly supported, especially in the development of the needed machinery for establishing a central Board of Education, and local associations with local boards. We further recommend that such boards should welcome as co-opted members those educators in government employ or in private schools, who may be able and willing to assist in the work of the boards.

15. Representation of Chinese on Educational Boards.

We recommend the largest practicable representation of Chinese on all boards in China which control or supervise our educational work.

Moukden Conference

1. Aims of Christian Education.

We feel that the life power in the Church is the Holy Spirit of God; that above all things we must look to Him for success in our work and seek this power as the fundamental aim of education, but we also realize that at the present juncture intellectual education of the highest standard is demanded for the training of Christian youth to take leadership in Church and State.

2. Middle Schools.

This Conference recommends that the Church equip and maintain in all its centres strong middle schools, whose chief aim should be the preparation of Christian leaders. With this end in view, the course in these schools should in all cases lead up to matriculation in one of the colleges of the Church, and the pupils in them should be encouraged in every way to pursue their education, having as their goal the best personal equipment for the service of Christ, whatever be their sphere.

3. Normal College Work.

The establishment of normal college work for men in Manchuria is urgently needed for the training of elementary school teachers.

4. Education of Women and Girls.

For the more efficient working of girls' schools it is desirable that there should be greater definiteness of aim, and a uniform standard. It is suggested, therefore, that a girls' school board or educational committee, representative of the three Missions, be appointed to deal with primary, high school and normal work. Further, with our inadequate staff of foreign teachers it is felt that our only hope of reaching out to undertake the urgent needs and unprecedented opportunities of the time, is to concentrate more than ever before on the work of training Chinese leaders for these special needs. Thus it is desirable:—

- (1) That provision be made for the efficient training of kindergarten and primary school teachers, who would not only teach the children but would also give periodic instruction to the mothers in such subjects as elementary hygiene and child culture.
- (2) That in view of the vast numbers of the gentry, merchants and government school class, whom we are still unable to reach, some such agency as Young Women's Christian Association work should be inaugurated, and to this end we should begin at once to choose and train suitable Chinese leaders.
- (3) That a higher standard should be aimed at in the training of women evangelists, and that to this end a central school should be established to which suitable candidates might be sent from local Bible schools for further and more advanced training.

5. Relation of Christian Schools to Those of the Government.

As the Christian schools should be regarded by the Chinese nation not as external, but distinctly as intimate, organic factors of its life and progress, and as the pupils of the schools should feel themselves in no secular respect dissociated from their fellow scholars of the national educational institutions, it is desirable that the schools of the Government and those of the Churches should be linked as closely as can be by every feasible bond. Whenever the curriculum of government schools shall have been drawn up in a manner that promises stability of policy, it should be adopted by the church schools, if involving no sacrifice of our religious tenets. We recommend that the matter of government inspection of Christian schools and of having government representatives on the boards of management of our colleges should be carefully considered. Friendly relations should be established wherever possible between the two classes of schools, whether by means of discussion of common interests among the teachers, or by debates and athletic contests among the students.

6. Theological Education.

While the training of pastors should remain the chief work of theological colleges, we feel sure that the Chinese Church will produce men of special gifts as public speakers and writers, whose influence will reach far beyond the limits of the ministry to a single congregation. It is most important that such men should have the fullest opportunity of acquiring knowledge of every kind that would equip them for such work, one of the most important parts of which will be the construction of an adequate and powerful Christian apologetic, based upon a common knowledge both of theology in all its departments and of the anti-christian philosophies of the East and of the West. We recommend that in the case of all candidates for the theological college a partial or complete arts course be insisted upon, and that some of the ablest students be given opportunity and encouragement to study the original languages of the Bible.

7. Industrial Education.

This Conference urges the Missions here represented to proceed to the establishment of an industrial school with a view to securing that Christian apprentices may learn trades under Christian influences, and that from this school shops and factories may develop which in turn may become nurseries of Christian life and work.

8. Technical Education.

Inasmuch as many Christian students are not naturally fitted for service in the Church, and inasmuch as the prevailing influence of government colleges is generally adverse to the moral and spiritual well-being of the students, it is desirable that the Church provide technical education under its own auspices. From this point of view the proposal to found a union Christian university at Peking with a department of technical studies is to be heartily commended.

Seoul Conference

1. Aims of Christian Education.

Education in Korea as carried on by Christian missions finds its field among the Christian youth of the country. Its aim is to take them at the most plastic period of life, and to make them, in faith, zeal and practice, pillars and leaders in the Church of Christ, irrespective of the ultimate calling or profession they will ultimately follow.

2. Facts and Tendencies in Government Education.

The following facts and tendencies in government education are significant:—

- (1) The Government, with a view to the perfect assimilation of the Korean people into the Empire of Japan, attaches the utmost importance to the study of the national language (Japanese).
- (2) In view of the economic condition of Korea, industrial and technical education are emphasized increasingly from the lower grades upward. This makes the system almost entirely utilitarian and the cultural idea quite secondary.
- (3) The teaching of religion is wholly excluded from government schools, and there is a strong insistence on the outward forms of expression of loyalty to the Government.
- (4) While believing that the fundamental end to be sought in education is the production of that high character which makes the man true and competent in all his obligations, and while holding that this is best attained by the Christian faith, we frankly recognize that in those most valuable contributory factors of schools and class-room management, discipline and pedagogics, the government schools have in many cases attained an excellence greatly superior to that of the schools under missionary control.

- (5) It appears to be the government policy to charge no tuition fees, to supply text-books free, and in some cases to give student support.

3. Principles Determining Relations to the Government.

As to the principles which should determine our relations to the Government, we must never forget that our business is the propagation of the Gospel, that we are in a country with an imperialistic form of government, that this Government holds the education of the people subject to its supervision, that it is a fundamental principle of the Christian religion to recognize and to teach that "the powers that be are ordained of God," and that in our schools, therefore, while keeping them distinctively Christian, we should all aim at absolute conformity with all governmental requirements and policies.

4. Progress Towards a Single System of Christian Education.

By our Educational Federation, which controls the educational work of six of the principal Missions, we believe that we have the lines well laid down towards bringing the Christian education of the country into a single system with a maximum of efficiency and a minimum of waste.

Tokyo Conference of Missionaries

1. Favourable Attitude Towards Christian Education.

Both the Japanese people and the Japanese Government are clearly becoming more favourable towards Christian education. There is a growing appreciation of the good moral influence that Christianity exerts in education. Signs are not lacking also that the time is approaching when the more decidedly cultural character of Christian education in its higher grades will be more fully understood and prized. Moreover, there is a growing need of and demand for higher education for women that presents a strong challenge to the forces of women's higher Christian education in Japan.

2. Religion Needed in Moral Education.

There is a rapidly deepening conviction on the part of the Japanese nation that the influence of religion is needed in the moral education of the rising generation. But the Government itself cannot undertake to teach religion in its tax-sustained schools. Hence there is a dilemma here that offers an opportunity to Christian education to render a unique service by training the men and women that are required to develop a great religious educational work through the Sunday school, and thus meet a great national need while at the same time laying broad foundations for the greater Christian Church of the future.

3. Wherein Christian Education in Japan has Failed.

The Christian education of Japan is open to two great criticisms: though progressing it is, as educational work, not first-class, and it has failed to produce Christian leaders and workers in sufficient numbers. Mainly through inadequacy of financial support, in its teaching forces, in its methods, and in its equipment, Christian education is not abreast with the national education. The failure in producing leaders is no doubt due to various causes, of which one has probably been insufficient realization of the importance of this function of the Christian schools. Another reason has been the meagreness of the Christian education of the higher grades. Middle school education alone is not adequate for the production of leaders.

4. Formation of an Adequate Educational Policy.

In view of the above facts, and in view of the fundamental importance of Christian education to the whole Christian cause in Japan, the time is at hand when the Christian forces concerned should formulate a comprehensive, definite and aggressive policy for the future development of this work. To what extent should Christian educational work be expanded? what should be its nature and ideals? what is the type of men and women that it should produce? what place should it seek to take in the national life?—these are questions that should be determined now by united wisdom and under divine guidance in order that Christian education may fulfil its great mission in Japan.

5. Strengthening and Expansion of Christian Educational Work.

To meet these opportunities and needs of Christian education and to overcome its weaknesses there is needed in Japan a strengthening and expansion of the whole Christian educational work. The schools call for a more liberal financial support, making possible better teachers, better equipment in buildings, scientific apparatus, libraries, more ample grounds, better physical culture provisions and the securing of a better class of admitted students. In order to hold the best teachers a system of pensions should be instituted resembling that of the government schools.

6. An Entirely Christian and Highly Efficient Teaching Staff.

Definite and adequate provision should be made for the raising up of better teaching staffs. Scholarships should be granted to promising Christian students for the pursuit of their studies in higher educational institutions in Japan, or for study abroad, in order that gradually it may become possible to attain to the ideal of an entirely Christian and at the same time highly efficient teaching staff.

7. Additional Specially Qualified Educational Missionaries.

The situation calls for additional educational missionaries, who are specially qualified both by pedagogical study and experience, and by special work in the branches which they are expected to teach.

8. Co-operation Above Middle School Grade.

While we hail with joy recent movements towards combination in higher educational work, we express our belief that for the sake of economy of men and means and of higher efficiency still further combinations should be made in work above middle school or higher girls' school grade, and that particularly Missions with little or no theological equipment should earnestly consider the feasibility of co-operation, as far as possible, with schools already well equipped.

9. More Middle Schools Needed.

At least five more middle schools are needed, one each in Yokohama, in Hokkaido, in the Echigo-Echizan region, in the region between Kobe and Shimonoseki and in Shikoku.

10. A Christian University.

We recognize the supreme importance to the Christian cause in Japan of the establishment of a first-rank Christian university. Such an institution will accomplish two great purposes: first, it will develop college grade work, and secondly it will, in and of itself, accomplish a work that is essential to the ultimate success of Christianity in Japan.

11. A Christian College for Women.

We heartily commend the proposal to establish by co-operative effort a first-class Christian college for women, and we earnestly recommend the establishment of such a college at an early date, before the present opportune time passes by, and the ground is pre-empted by non-Christian education of this grade.

Tokyo Conference of Japanese Leaders

1. The Present Situation as Regards Christian Education.

A study of the situation of Christian education in Japan at the present time reveals certain outstanding facts. The Japanese Government is clearly becoming more favourable towards Christian education. Among the people also there is a growing appreciation of the good moral influence that Christianity exerts in education. Signs are not lacking also that the time is approaching when the more decidedly cultural character of Christian education will be more fully understood and prized. Moreover, there is a growing need of higher education for women that the present equipment does not at all satisfy.

2. Religion Needed in Moral Education.

There is a rapidly deepening conviction on the part of the Japanese nation that the influence of religion is needed in the moral education of the rising generation. But the Government itself cannot undertake to teach religion in its tax-sustained schools. Hence there is a dilemma here that offers an opportunity to Christian education to render a unique service, by training the men and women that are required to develop a great religious educational work through the Sunday school, and thus meet a great national need while at the same time laying broad foundations for the greater Christian Church of the future.

3. Criticisms of Christian Education in Japan.

Christian education in Japan is open to two great criticisms: though progressing, it is not, as educational work, satisfactory; and it has failed to produce Christian leaders and workers in sufficient numbers. Mainly through inadequacy of financial support in its teaching forces, in its methods and in its equipment, Christian education is not abreast with the national education. The failure in producing leaders is no doubt due to various causes, of which one has probably been insufficient realization of the importance of this function of the Christian schools. Another reason has been the meagreness of the Christian education of the higher grades. Middle school education alone is not adequate for the production of leaders.

4. A Comprehensive and Aggressive Policy Needed.

In view of the above facts, and in view of the fundamental importance of Christian education to the whole Christian cause in Japan, the time is at hand when the Christian forces concerned should formulate a comprehensive, definite and aggressive policy for the future development of this work.

5. Strengthening and Expanding Educational Work.

There is needed in Japan a strengthening and expansion of the whole Christian educational work. Scholarships should be granted to promising Christian students for the pursuit of their studies in higher educational institutions in Japan, or for study abroad, in order that gradually it may become possible to attain to the ideal of an entirely Christian and at the same time highly efficient teaching staff.

7. Additional Educational Missionaries.

The situation calls for additional educational missionaries who are specially qualified both by pedagogical study and experience, and by special work in the branches which they are expected to teach. Teachers who are well versed in the Bible are needed to make the Bible teaching more effective.

8. Co-operation in the Higher School Work.

While we hail with joy recent movements towards combination in higher educational work, we express our belief that for the sake of economy of men and means, and of higher efficiency, still further combinations should be made in work above middle school or higher girls' school grade; and that particularly Missions with little or no theological equipment should earnestly consider the feasibility of co-operation, as far as possible, with schools already well equipped.

9. More Middle Schools Needed.

Several more Christian middle schools are needed

10. A First Rank Christian University

We recognize the supreme importance to the Christian cause in Japan of the establishment of a first-rank Christian university, to which women may be admitted as students. Such an institution will accomplish two great purposes: first, it will develop college grade work; and, second, it will in and of itself accomplish a work that is essential to the ultimate success of Christianity in Japan.

11. A Christian College for Women.

We heartily commend the proposal to establish by co-operative effort on the part of all the Missions a first-class Christian college for women, and we earnestly recommend the establishment of such at an early date, before the present opportune time pass by.

Japan National Conference

I. Present Status of Religious Education.

Both the Japanese Government and the Japanese people are clearly becoming more favourable to Christian education. There is a growing appreciation of the good moral influence that Christianity exerts in education. Signs are not lacking also that the time is approaching when the more decidedly cultural character of Christian education in its higher grades will be more fully understood and prized. Moreover, there is a growing need of higher education for women, to meet which the present Christian educational agencies are far from adequate.

2. Religion in Moral Education.

There is a growing conviction on the part of the Japanese nation that the influence of religion is needed in the moral education of the rising generation. Hence there is an opportunity for Christian schools to render a unique service by training men and women for leadership in the development of a great religious educational work through the Sunday school, and thus meet a national need while at the same time laying broad foundations for the greater Christian Church of the future.

3. Criticism of Christian Education in Japan.

The Christian education of Japan is open to two great criticisms: though progressing, it is not first-class, and it has failed to produce Christian leaders and workers in sufficient numbers. Mainly through inadequacy of financial support Christian schools, in their teaching forces, in methods and in equipment, are not abreast of the national schools of corresponding grade. Hence they do not now attract a due proportion of the young men and young women to whom we may look for Christian leadership. A further reason for this has been the meagreness of the Christian education of the higher grades. While middle school education is of strategic importance in calling out Christian leaders, it alone is not sufficient for their development.

4. A Comprehensive, Definite and Progressive Policy Needed.

This Conference is convinced, in view of the above facts, and in view of the fundamental significance of Christian education to the whole Christian cause in Japan, that the time is at hand when the Christian forces concerned should formulate a comprehensive, definite and progressive policy for the future development of this work.

5. Development and Expansion in Christian Education.

This Conference is convinced that in Japan there is needed a strengthening and expansion of the whole Christian educational work. The schools call for more liberal financial support, making possible better teachers, better equipment in buildings, scientific apparatus and libraries, more ample grounds, better provision for physical culture and the securing of a better class of students. Also a system of pensions should be instituted resembling that of the government schools.

6. Better Teaching Staffs.

Definite and adequate provision should be made for the raising up of better teaching staffs. Scholarships should be granted to promising Christian students for the pursuit of their studies in higher educational institutions in Japan, or for study abroad, in order that gradually it may become possible to attain to the ideal of an entirely Christian and at the same time a highly efficient teaching staff.

7. Additional Educational Missionaries.

The situation calls for additional educational missionaries, who are specially qualified both by pedagogical training and by special preparation in the branches they are expected to teach.

8. Co-operation in Higher Education.

This Conference hails with satisfaction recent movements towards combination in higher educational work, and expresses its belief that for the sake of economy in men and means, and of a greater degree of efficiency, still further combinations should be made, and in particular that Missions with little or no theological equipment should earnestly consider the feasibility of co-operation, as far as possible, with schools already well equipped.

9. Additional Middle and Girls' High Schools Needed.

Additional Christian middle schools at certain important points in the Empire are needed, and should be established. Additional girls' high schools are also needed.

10. A Central Christian University of First Rank.

This Conference recognizes the establishment of a central Christian university of the first rank as the supreme need of Christian education in Japan. Such an institution, distinctly Christian in character, standing on a par with the Imperial universities, will serve as the necessary cap-stone to the whole system of Christian education in Japan. It will co-ordinate, strengthen and develop the Christian schools of college grade, and will make a pre-eminent contribution to the religious, moral and social progress of the nation. It is clearly essential to the ultimate success of Christianity in Japan.

11. A Christian College for Women.

This Conference heartily commends the proposal to establish, by co-operative effort on the part of all the Missions, a first-class Christian college for women, and it earnestly recommends the founding of such an institution at an early date, before the present opportune time pass by. For work of higher grade, women should have access to the Christian university.

12. The Christian Educational Associations.

This Conference urges the full development of both the men's and the women's Christian Educational Associations, and their affiliation with the Continuation Committee of Japan.

VII
CHRISTIAN LITERATURE

VII. CHRISTIAN LITERATURE

Christian literature is the necessitated corollary of Christian education. Of what avail is the ability to read if Christians have nothing worth reading? Is it not a weapon of the adversary if this literacy only enables readers to devour the filth of India's Puranas and Tantras, or the flood of materialistic and anti-christian literature imported from the Occident, or issuing from the Rationalist Press Association in the Far East? The India National Conference puts the case clearly: "Through the progress of education the literacy of the people of India is steadily rising; the Indian mind, awakened to the thought and intellectual methods of the West, needs new literature of every type for nourishment; the chief religious sects are scattering wide their literature, much of it distinctly antichristian; and the Indian Church, daily growing in numbers and intelligence, requires an abundant supply of fresh, healthy and varied reading."

Examine the several lists in this chapter and note how varied is the demand—especially the Peking Conference suggestions. The preamble reads: "In view of the changes connected with China's revolution, the governing classes, the students and people generally are laying increasing emphasis upon literature, eagerly seeking all new thought, and are making zealous efforts to search into and set forth the tenets of Confucianism, Buddhism, Taoism and Mohammedanism. If the Christian Church is not well on its guard it will lose a unique opportunity. It must by all means provide on the one hand for the guidance of the people, on the other for the averting of the perils which beset them." Then follow special lists of books needed—for non-Christians in the classical and in Mandarin, and for the edification of Christians, also written in classical Chinese and in Mandarin. Books on popular science and medicine and four periodicals conclude the statement.

The Conferences wisely say that literary geniuses cannot be sent out from the Occident to become editors, translators and authors for Asia. Fiats do not produce writers who can fully master strange tongues and assimilate their delicate flavours and aromas; nor do society votes give men Chinese eyes, Japanese ears, or Indian hearts. Long years of laborious study, sympathetic entrance into the holy of holies of Asiatic ideals, vision commensurate with present and prospective needs, prolonged immersion in the life and thought of the masses and the literary skill to clothe Christianity and its multitudinous by-products with the attractive and flowing robes of the colour-loving Orient, are conditions of success for this work which become evident only in Asia itself.

To select such writers calls for discerning committees, whose onerous duty it also is to survey existing literature, pruning away fruitless or dead material, deciding upon other productions which need revision as to thought and expression, and preparing lists of new works with the best writers for each. The Christian Literature Societies of India, China, and Japan will be a part of this new literary movement, and a number of tract and book societies will become helpful coadjutors. A new enthusiasm will be evoked in the Churches of Asia when their own sons and daughters enter the realm of authorship, as few have hitherto done. Scholarships and other provisions for raising up a competent body of indigenous writers are important suggestions; for they, as well as missionary authors and translators, must possess as fertile brains and as facile pens as can be found on that continent if Christian literature is to do the most possible for missions.

Literature is not intended for musty mission book-rooms nor as food for greedy white ants. It must take wings and fly to remote hamlets and villages; it must gain currency through such newspaper promotion as Mr. Pieters in Japan advocates; union reading rooms in great centres of teeming life, and smaller ones in every large Church, are urged; quarterlies and humbler Christian dailies should be strong enough to mould and direct the thought of the Church and the general public into pure and life-giving channels; and Hankow reminds us that prayer is a fructifying power in the hearts of writers and readers alike. Abundant means, able authors, vital themes forcefully and attractively treated, and a wise and wide distribution, will cover Asia with those leaves which are for the healing of nations.

Colombo Conference

1. Production and Distribution.

This Conference is profoundly impressed with the importance of greater attention being given to the production and dissemination of Christian literature adapted to the needs of Christians and non-Christians throughout Ceylon.

2. Board Grants and Detached Service.

It would press upon home Boards the urgent necessity of making an annual grant towards the support of a literary missionary and an adequate editorial staff, and in this way helping to strengthen the hands of the Christian Literature Society; it would suggest, also, that home Boards be requested to enable the workers best fitted for the task to undertake literary work by setting them free, as far as possible, for this special and urgent duty.

3. Circulation of Vernacular Literature.

It would further urge upon all bodies at work in Ceylon the great need of increasing the circulation of vernacular Christian literature as a department of missionary work which produces abundant results, spiritual and otherwise.

4. Every Worker a Distributive Centre.

It is of opinion that the circulation of Christian literature would be considerably increased if each Society would seek in some systematic way to secure that every agent, European and Ceylonese, become a distributive centre.

Madras Conference

1. Need for Greater Production.

The Conference is fully convinced that the place of Christian literature in the missionary enterprise is growing steadily in importance, and that there is most urgent need in South India for a great advance in the production of literature in English and in the vernaculars, both for Christians and for non-Christians.

2. Release of Qualified Writers Otherwise Employed.

Since effective literary work can as a rule best be done by those who have already had considerable missionary experience and who in their daily work are in close contact with the people, the Conference urges that the right policy is, not to bring out fresh men from home for the purpose, but to make arrangements whereby those best fitted should be set free for a limited period to prepare literature.

3. A Committee Recommended.

The Conference, therefore, recommends the appointment of a representative committee by the Federal Missionary Council [see under Co-operation] to investigate the whole problem of the preparation, publication and distribution of English and vernacular Christian literature in South India, and to take counsel with other literature committees that may be appointed elsewhere in India or in connection with the Continuation Committee. The Conference wishes the proposed committee to give careful consideration to the following, among other questions:—

- (1) What forms of literature are most urgently required.
- (2) How men and women of literary capacity, both European and Indian, may be discovered and encouraged to write.
- (3) Whether special training is necessary in certain cases and, if so, what its character should be.
- (4) How the necessary funds may be obtained:—
 - a. To set men and women free for short periods to do literary work.
 - b. To provide remuneration, where necessary, for literary work.
 - c. To meet the urgent need for money to facilitate publication and distribution.

Bombay Conference

1. Present Importance of Christian Literature.

The production and distribution of Christian literature in the vernaculars and in English are means of missionary effort peculiarly important at the present time, on the one hand for the instruction and up-building of the Church of Christ in India, and on the other for presenting to the educational classes Christian truth in its relation to Indian thought.

2. Co-operative Maintenance of Literary Workers.

Such literary work is a form of missionary activity in which co-operation between Missions is peculiarly suitable and practicable; and in the case of each of the great vernaculars of this area, Marathi and Gujarati, a worker of suitable gifts and ability should be specially set apart to furnish guidance and encouragement in the production of Christian literature. Such workers (as was proposed in a scheme for a Marathi literature missionary, prepared by the Bombay Missionary Conference) should have the financial support of all the Missions within the language area.

3. Setting Experts Free for Short Periods.

In view of the need for a high class of Christian literature written by experts who are intimately acquainted with the Indian situation, arrangements should be made whereby Indian and foreign workers, who would otherwise not be available for this purpose, may be set free for short periods for the special purpose of the preparation of such works.

Jubbulpore Conference

1. Lack of Literature in Hindi.

There is urgent need in this Hindi-speaking area of an increased production of Christian literature in that language and of an improvement in its quality.

2. Discovering Needs and Planning to Meet Them.

It is essential that the missionaries in this area outline a policy to discover the urgency of the need of particular books or classes of literature, and to lay plans for the production of this literature.

3. Christian Writers.

We recommend that efforts be made, especially by managers of mission presses and by the Literature Committee of the Mid-

India Missionary Association, to enlarge the number of Christian writers in the vernacular.

4. Dissemination of Literature.

We recommend that missionaries and leaders in the Indian Christian community encourage the reading of Christian literature by making efforts to introduce periodicals and books throughout the Christian community.

Allahabad Conference

1. Hindi and Urdu.

This Conference desires to direct attention to the great poverty of existing Hindi Christian literature, and to urge the necessity of steps being taken to enlarge and improve it. Urdu literature in the Roman character also greatly needs enlargement.

2. Christian Literature in English.

We would also call attention to the urgent need of more English Christian literature specially suited to the ever-increasing number of English-reading non-Christian Indians.

3. Controversial Literature.

Special attention should be directed to making controversial literature more generous and sympathetic in tone and to approaching non-Christians from the spiritual rather than from the polemical standpoint.

4. Enlisting Educated Indians as Writers.

Special efforts should be made to enlist the more highly educated Indians in the production of vernacular Christian literature.

5. Collaboration.

The opinion is expressed that there might be more collaboration between Indians and foreign missionaries in producing books.

6. Director of Vernacular Literature.

It is recommended that a director of vernacular Christian literature be appointed to further the production and distribution of Christian literature, and that the North India Tract and Book Society be asked to initiate this scheme in the following way:—

- (1) The suitable person being selected, his Society should be asked to lend him for, say, five years (he still remaining a missionary of his own Society).
- (2) His salary and all expenses should be met by contributions from the various Missionary Societies in the area.
- (3) The duties of the director should be not only authorship but also the ascertainment of special needs, the discovery of possible writers, and the endeavour to get them to write the needed books.

7. Detached Service for Short Periods.

In the case of a missionary or a missionary worker being especially fitted to produce an urgently needed book, his Society should be urged to grant him leave for a short period to carry out his task.

8. Distribution.

Missionaries and all Christian workers should be urged to render every help they can in the distribution of Christian literature.

Lahore Conference

1. A New Literature Needed.

This Conference calls attention to the destitution in the sphere of literature owing to changes in conditions caused by the rapid extension of education in India and by the expansion of the Church, leading to the necessity of creating a new literature to take the place of what has become obsolete, and to meet the requirements due to the reform movements and the rise of new forms of faith among both Hindus and Mohammedans.

2. Fresh Tasks for Book and Tract Societies.

This Conference recommends that the Book and Tract Societies in Europe and America undertake anew the creation and publication of literature in English and in the vernacular languages to meet the great destitution in this Empire. Special need is noted for a literature for women and children, for young boys and girls, also helps for Bible study and literature for the edification of the Church.

3. Writers, Translators and Editors.

Mission Boards and the directors of Tract and Book Societies should set apart a number of men and women to write or translate and edit this literature. It is suggested that by offering prizes for certain kinds of books and by granting bonuses to competent authors, much could be done to stimulate the production of good literature.

4. Encouragement of Christian Writers.

The Conference recommends that special provision should be made to encourage Christian writers. It believes this can be done best by instituting fellowships in connection with the Christian colleges and theological institutions. This would also provide for such writers special literary facilities as well as contact with the general intellectual situation of the country, and with the needs and problems of the Church.

5. Christian Reviews in English and in Urdu.

In view of the vast increase of English education in India, and the existence of numerous forms of antichristian effort, organized especially during the last decade, and expressing themselves through English books and magazines, and in view of the fact that as yet there has been no adequate attempt to meet and answer constructively this literary opposition, therefore, this Conference strongly recommends the founding of a monthly Christian review in English for the whole of India. It further recommends that a similar magazine in Urdu be maintained, and that the effort to establish a magazine for women be highly commended.

6. Co-operation of Literature-producing Agencies.

This Conference suggests that the cause of Christian literature would be greatly advanced by a closer co-operation of the existing Book and Tract Societies in India, and the directors and committees of such Societies are urged to work towards the establishment of one strong literature society under the direction of one Board having its headquarters in India.

7. Distribution of Literature.

This Conference respectfully urges the Mission Boards and Societies to consider the extreme importance of making the distribution of the Scriptures and Christian books by sale and gift an integral part of their work.

Calcutta Conference

1. Inadequate Supply of Christian Literature.

This Conference finds that there is a very inadequate supply of Christian literature in this area for both Christians and non-Christians in both English and the vernaculars, and that, in view of the present rapid spread of education in this area, it regards it as of the utmost importance that adequate plans be formed and carried out for the remedying of this most serious defect.

2. Guiding and Encouraging Writers.

This Conference therefore urges that men and women, both Indian and European, who are capable of writing should be guided and encouraged in the production of literature.

3. Release of Gifted Writers for Literary Work.

Since it is only those who have had considerable experience in Christian work in this country, and whose daily duty brings them into closest touch with individual souls, who can produce the best literature, this Conference urges that arrangements be made whereby individuals of real capacity, both Indian and European, be set free to devote a portion of their time to literary work.

4. Methods of Publication and Circulation of Literature.

This Conference recognizes that all that is being done at present in Bengal in the way of publishing and circulating Christian literature is altogether incommensurate with both the opportunity and the need; that fresh methods must be thought out, and much more money provided for purposes of publication; and that mission workers must be stirred to a far keener consciousness of the duty that lies upon them to further the sale of Christian literature by means of book-stalls and of various forms of personal effort.

5. Further Investigation Requested.

This Conference requests that in consideration of the serious situation disclosed in the above findings, the Committee being organized to carry out the findings of this Conference appoint a representative committee to investigate this problem in all its bearings, and to communicate with other such committees with a view to the solution of the whole problem.

India National Conference

1. Increasing Importance of Christian Literature.

This Conference would earnestly draw attention to the rapidly increasing importance of Christian literature in Indian missionary work. In the past far too little systematic and organized effort has been spent on its cultivation; and the Conference doubts whether missionary bodies in India and at home realize the vast and swiftly expanding field open to its influence. Through the progress of education the literacy of the people of India is steadily rising; the Indian mind, awakened to the thought and intellectual methods of the West, needs new literature of every type for its nourishment; the chief religious sects are scattering wide their literature, much of it distinctly antichristian; and the Indian Church, daily growing in numbers and intelligence, requires an abundant supply of fresh, healthy and varied reading.

2. Literature Committee.

This Conference is therefore convinced that vigorous and farsighted measures are necessary to cope with the new situation; and, in order that the fullest knowledge may be available and the sanest plans adopted, requests the National Missionary Council [see under Co-operation] to appoint a Literature Committee:—

- (1) To correspond with Literature Committees in the provinces and with the Continuation Committee.
- (2) To make, with the aid of the Provincial Representative Committees, a complete study of the question in India, so as to ascertain what literature is available, what classes of books, tracts, periodicals and newspapers are required, and what is the order of their urgency.
- (3) To discover capable writers and to arrange for the production of the literature required.
- (4) To consider the practicability of bringing the agencies at present publishing Christian literature in India into closer relationship and fuller co-ordination.

3. Interim Committee.

The following Interim Literature Committee is hereby appointed to act until the permanent Committee be appointed:—

J. N. Farquhar, Convener,	Rev. E. Greaves,
Rev. C. F. Andrews,	Rev. N. Macnicol, D.LITT.,
B. N. Athavale,	Rev. J. Passmore,
Rev. G. W. Brown, PH.D.,	F. D. Phinney,
Rev. J. G. Dann,	Rev. H. A. Popley,
Rev. J. M. B. Duncan,	Rev. Talib-ud-din.

4. Provincial Missionaries for Vernacular Literature.

This Conference recommends that the system, already in vogue in some parts of India, of having a missionary set apart for the purpose of discovering, stimulating and guiding writers of vernacular literature, should be adopted in each of the chief language areas of this country.

5. Literary Appointments for Short Periods.

Since effective literary work can, as a rule, be best done by those who have already had considerable experience of Christian work in India and who are in daily contact with the people, this Conference urges that arrangements be made whereby individual Indians or Europeans who are fitted for the task should be set free for definite periods to prepare literature.

6. Necessary Funds for Literature Societies.

The Home Committees of the various Societies engaged in the production and distribution of Christian literature in India, and also those Missions in India that print and publish literature should be invited to provide such liberal grants for the work as would render it less dependent on its success from a purely business point of view.

7. Literary Fellowships.

It is very desirable that missionary colleges and theological institutions should be made centres of literary activity and that every help and encouragement should be given, by the institution of fellowships and otherwise, to tutors and professors with literary gifts to devote their time to the production of literature.

8. Appeal.

This Conference places these findings before the Boards of Foreign Missions in full confidence that they will appreciate and respond to the same, and appeals to the Missions of India and to the Indian Church to realize the significance of the present crisis and to turn with new resolution to the double task of planning for the production of literature and of using every available means for scattering Christian books and tracts broadcast over India.

Rangoon Conference

I. The Situation, Difficulties and Needs.

This Conference recognizes:—

- (1) The awakening of the peoples of Burma, due to widespread educational advantages, except in the case of illiterate hill tribes.
- (2) The inadequacy of all that has been done, however much it may be, to meet the needs of the present and of the future.
- (3) The difficulty of securing writers able to write articles and books which will attract the native reader.
- (4) The difficulty of securing purchasers of such literature as we have in sufficient quantities to support a publishing work.
- (5) The need of one or more Christian newspapers of wider scope than at present, and of greater frequency of issue than once a month.
- (6) In general literature, not distinctively religious, the need of temperance and purity literature, of biographies of strong Christian characters in history, of books of popular science, not in the form of school text-books, and stories of notable conversions, of some such character as "Twice-Born Men."
- (7) The need of theological literature for students in seminaries and for all devout and earnest students of the Bible.

- (8) The need of fresh apologetic literature suited to actual needs and present conditions.
- (9) The need of some further Scripture translation for the lesser tribes of Burma, even though owing to the process of change now going on the production of a broad Christian literature for these tribes may not be needed.

2. Proposals for the Production and Distribution of Literature.

To meet these recognized needs, we urge:—

- (1) That an increased emphasis be placed upon the production and dissemination of Christian vernacular literature, especially in Burmese, which is the lingua franca of the country.
- (2) That a definite attempt be made to secure the services of those who are capable of writing to the acceptance of any Christian people, to the end that books and articles may be prepared for publication.
- (3) That every effort possible be made to put such books before the people at a price which shall consider both the actual cost of production and the ability of the people to pay, in order that the people may appreciate that for which they pay, and that the cost of such work may not be too heavy a drain upon home funds.
- (4) That Christian workers at an early period in their work be engaged in selling Christian literature at a small fixed pay with good commission on all sales, both for the sake of the sales and of the effect upon the workers.

Singapore Conference

1. Scope of Literature Available.

The Conference finds that the entire Bible has already been translated into several of the principal languages in this field, but that there are many languages in which no missionary work is yet being done, and into which not even a single portion of the Bible has been translated. A few tracts and booklets have been prepared and printed in Malay, Javanese and Sundanese, but literature suitable to the special needs of work among Moslems is greatly needed, and the recent controversial works for Moslems published in Egypt and India should be translated into the above-mentioned languages. Christian story books, tracts and biographies are very necessary.

2. Needed Literature in English and in Dutch.

This Conference finds that up-to-date Christian literature in the English and Dutch languages is most urgently needed to counteract the immoral, rationalistic and antichristian literature put out by the secular presses and sold by native book-sellers.

3. Committee on Malay Literature.

This Conference considers that the production of Malay literature in the different parts of the field (Netherlands Indies and British Malaya) might be made useful to the whole field by an interchange of all literature put out, and by an alteration of orthography and local words wherever necessary. To this end a Committee with two branches (in Batavia and Singapore, respectively) should be appointed; and these two branches should work together and be in constant communication with one another. This Conference appoints Rev. W. G. Shellabear, Rev. W. H. Williams, Rev. A. J. Bliet, Rev. L. Tiemersma, and Messrs. Tisdall and Goh Hood-keng, as such Committee.

4. Distribution of Literature.

This Conference considers that a special book-shop in every large centre would probably be a financial failure; that the selling of the publications should be by means of missionaries and colporteurs; and that it is advisable to sell rather than to distribute the booklets without charge.

5. Periodical Literature.

It is desirable that more use be made of periodical literature printed in Malay, Chinese and Tamil, as a means of Christian propaganda.

6. Language Study for Literary Ends.

This Conference considers that missionaries and native Christians should give enough time to the study of the languages of the people among whom they work, so as to be able to write or translate books in such languages. Native Christians who have ability in writing in their own language should be carefully sought for, and encouraged to give their time to such work.

Canton Conference

1. Large Occasion for Use of Christian Literature.

We call earnest attention to the movements of the new time in enlightenment and education as affording large occasion for making the Gospel known by means of Christian literature, leading onward to those greater triumphs of Christianity in China for which a century of missions has opened the way.

2. Bible Translation and Distribution.

We recognize gratefully the efforts of the Bible Societies in promoting the translation and distribution of the Scriptures in book style and vernaculars, in character and Roman letter versions. It is suggested that an edition of the Bible with Mandarin and Wenli in parallel columns would meet a present need. We urge the widest provision and diffusion of vernacular Scriptures and ask that the aims of Bible Societies be directed continuously to uniformity in respect of meaning, and to lucidity, directness and dignity of style, thus enhancing the appeal of the Bible to every class of readers.

3. Exegetical and Homiletical Literature.

In exegetical and homiletical literature there is need for preachers' commentaries having as a chief characteristic spiritual suggestiveness. A concise commentary in English written from the Chinese viewpoint would meet a demand created by advancing knowledge. For the Church there should be provided psalms and hymns and spiritual songs in which literary grace is joined with devout aspiration.

4. Devotional Books, Christian Biography and Church History.

For the Christian home we recommend a richer and more varied devotional literature with special reference to the prayer life. It is further advised that Christians form family libraries, however small, of Christian books, and that these include works on Christian biography and Church history and also records of recent missionary movements in the East and in the West.

5. Text-books for Students.

In schools and colleges there is need of text-books that keep the East in touch with the best that the West has to offer as helps to the Christian student in preparation for the ministry of the Gospel.

6. Evangelistic and Apologetic Books and Tracts.

Books and tracts for evangelistic uses should include tracts for the times, designed especially to meet the materialistic tendency of the age, and also works that contrast and compare the essentials of Christianity with those of other religions in China; also books that point out the great service rendered to the world by prominent Christians. We urge the better provision and circulation of apologetic literature adapted to commend Christianity as the world religion. Special stress is laid on the proved utility of short and plain tracts forming a series, each designed to carry forward an awakened and quickened attention, leading the reader step by step along the path of enlightenment and conviction. Moreover, ballads and other tracts in rhyme would prove of highest value in attracting a large class of readers.

7. Production of Literature, Within and Without the Church.

We express the deepest satisfaction in the literary gifts vouchsafed to the Chinese Church, and the assured conviction that this endowment wisely and graciously employed will make continuously for the spiritual enlightenment and advance of the Church and nation. We counsel that at points where aim, purpose and method in no wise conflict, literary forces beyond the Church's pale be sought as allies in widely extended endeavours to reach the people of China through the press of the new time. In order to do this there should be formed throughout this area literary circles, committees and conferences with appointed times of meeting for the discussion of all matters pertaining to Christian literature; and these circles, committees and conferences should be in close and regular correspondence with those which may be found in other parts of China, with a view to joint action in the preparation and diffusion of books and tracts. We recommend that Missionary Societies detach suitable men for special work as occasions arise, and that missionaries so detached seek the aid of such circles, committees and conferences.

8. Distribution through Colportage, Reading-rooms and the Press.

The first requisite is that books be adequately and suitably catalogued and described. Fuller use may well be made of existing facilities for distribution from preaching halls and book-rooms. Every chapel should have a stock of timely tracts. The increase of book-lending societies and of organized colportage would be of marked advantage. We recommend that reading-rooms and reading circles become a feature of literary distribution, and that the occasion offered by the newspapers for the wider circulation of articles on Christianity be taken as an approved means for effecting our missionary purpose.

Shanghai Conference

1. Present Opportunity and Present Danger.

There never has been a greater opportunity for successful Christian propaganda by means of literature than lies open to the Church today in China, and never was there greater danger lest the press should be used to the detriment of her people.

2. Books and Papers of High Grade and Modern in Style.

Now more than ever Christian books and papers must be of superior grade and modern in style so as to meet the needs of the times.

3. Capable Christian Chinese to Prepare the Literature.

Looking to the future, the preparation of Christian literature should, as soon as possible, be placed in the hands of capable Chinese Christians. In view of this there should be more facilities for the preparation of Chinese literary workers.

4. Means Proportionate to the Gravity of the Situation.

Special means must be used proportionate to the gravity of the situation. Among many, we select three:—

- (1) More men, Chinese and foreign, must be set apart for this work.

- (2) Literature Societies should have an adequate number of colporteurs and agents.
- (3) The secular press, as in Japan, may be used for evangelistic purposes.

5. More Co-operation between Existing Societies.

If union be impossible, there should be more co-operation between existing Societies. In this way some central organization might be created to standardize our literature and to remedy defects.

6. A Conference of Literary Workers Needed.

There is need of a definite policy or programme in all branches of the work. In order to formulate this and to crystallize opinion and action on the preceding and other cognate subjects, there should be a special convention of workers in this branch, whether they are in Societies or are working by themselves.

Tsinanfu Conference

1. Books Unsited for Present Use.

In the opinion of this Conference those books which are unsited for present use should be revised or withdrawn from publication.

2. Literature Needed for Christians.

There should be prepared for use of Christians:—

- (1) Theological text-books of the highest grade.
- (2) Bible commentaries, far more comprehensive and elaborate than those now available.
- (3) Books for the cultivation of character, comprising:—
 - a.* Bible stories graphically narrated for the young.
 - b.* Bible truths presented with reference to influencing conduct rather than merely for winning intellectual assent.
- (4) Biographies of eminent Christians of the past and present.
- (5) Interesting and helpful stories for children.
- (6) Books helpful to women in the home.
- (7) Books for the nurture of the spiritual life.

- (8) Books describing the more recent methods of Christian service.
- (9) Tracts for the times appropriate for wide distribution, some bearing on modern ideals of wholesome living and others presenting fundamentals of Christian truth.

3. For the Non-Christian Educated Classes.

To meet the needs of the non-Christian educated classes, we favour:—

- (1) Inviting one or two eminent writers in the East or West to prepare works dealing with current forms of unbelief in Eastern Asia.
- (2) The preparation of a popular history of the Christian Church.

4. A National Bureau for Encouraging Literature Production.

We favour the establishment of a national bureau which shall encourage the writing or translation of books and tracts for Christians and for non-Christians. The personnel of this bureau should include representatives of the existing organizations for publishing Christian literature.

5. Securing Able Christian Writers.

In order to obtain able Christian writers, we favour:—

- (1) Raising the standard of excellence in Chinese and English literary studies in Christian schools.
- (2) The nomination by the Provincial Federal Councils of Chinese and foreigners for either temporary or permanent literary work.
- (3) The sending of spiritually and intellectually qualified Chinese students abroad for study with a view to preparing Christian literature upon their return.

6. Promoting the Distribution and Wider Use of Literature.

In order to promote the dissemination and wider use of the best Christian literature:—

- (1) Arrangements should be made by the national bureau, suggested above, to transmit to pastors and missionaries the titles together with a summary and an appreciation of new books, as these books appear.

- (2) By appropriations from Missions or by special gifts a fund should be provided by means of which copies of new works may be sent gratis to pastors, thus giving them the opportunity to recommend these works to their hearers and friends.

Peking Conference

1. Providing Guidance and Averting Perils.

In view of the changes connected with China's revolution, the governing classes, the students and people generally are laying increasing emphasis upon literature, eagerly seeking all new thought and are making zealous efforts to search into and set forth the tenets of Confucianism, Buddhism, Taoism and Mohammedanism. If the Christian Church is not well on its guard it will lose a unique opportunity. It must by all means provide on the one hand for the guidance of the people, on the other for the averting of the perils which beset them.

2. Language, Style and Typography of Christian Literature.

Regarding the make-up and content of our literature,

- (1) The argument must be suited to the class of men for whom the book is intended.
- (2) The literary style must be suited to the times.
- (3) The printing and binding must be adapted to the prevailing demand.

5. Suggestions as to Method.

- (1) Be careful to discover and to cultivate literary ability in students.
- (2) Cultivate linguistic abilities of students and missionaries.
- (3) Avail ourselves of the talent of all the Churches.
- (4) Appoint a union committee of publication.
- (5) Set aside fit men temporarily for definite literary tasks.
- (6) Urge the Continuation Committee to secure the preparation of the strongest possible literature in defense of the Word of God.
- (7) Urge writers to keep in close touch with current thought.
- (8) Writers should be well posted in modern thought.

6. Distribution and Use of Literature.

- (1) Prepare a selected catalogue in English and Chinese of all Chinese Christian literature.

Hankow Conference

1. New Literature Essential to Meet New Conditions.

In view of the enlarged outlook of the Chinese people, and their changed attitude towards Christianity, it is essential that we produce new literature to meet the new conditions. We believe the following, among other things, are urgently needed:—

- (1) Literature for Christians:—
 - Church histories.
 - New commentaries.
 - A Bible dictionary.
 - A complete concordance.
 - A revised union hymn-book.
 - Helps for preachers.
 - A general theology.
 - Christian biographies.

Stories and simple books.

A Christian newspaper.

Scripture maps.

(2) Literature for educated non-Christians:—

Evidences of Christianity in varied forms.

A life of Christ.

A life of Paul.

Lives of eminent Christians.

Pamphlets on moral questions.

Books on hygiene and sanitation.

Articles for the daily press written from the Christian viewpoint.

Expositions of Christianity in relation to social questions and to nationality.

Histories of India and Egypt.

(3) Literature for the Uneducated:—

Colloquial rhymes and simple tales.

2. Discovery of Literary Talent Among Christians.

Missionaries should bring these needs before the Church, and should seek to discover literary talent among Christians.

3. Detached Service for Short Periods.

A man who has the burden of writing a book laid upon him, by others or by his own conscience, might be set free from other duties for a time to enable him to do this work.

4. Editors Needed.

It is essential that the Central China Religious Tract Society and the West China Religious Tract Society should have a foreign editorial secretary, a Chinese editorial secretary and an efficient staff of writers. We appeal to the Boards of Missions working in this area to assist the Societies to secure the two editors.

5. A Union Christian Book Store in Each Large City.

In every large city where there are many missionaries, there should be a well-stocked Christian book store on a prominent street. This book store should be a union enterprise. Moreover, every Church and every preacher should have a library, which should be revised and renewed periodically.

6. A Tract Society Sunday.

There should be a Tract Society Sunday observed once a year in all Churches, when an offering should be taken.

7. Prayer.

Prayer should be made for book writers and readers.

China National Conference

1. Demands for New Literature.

Owing to the changes following the establishment of the Republic in China and the attempt to bring about reform in every department, great stress is being laid upon new literature not only by the official and scholarly classes, but also by the people generally. They are eager for new knowledge, and their attitude towards Christianity is widely different from what it was formerly. If the Christian Church does not take advantage of this exceptional opportunity and meet the demand for knowledge by a large production of books and periodicals making clear the Christian message, pernicious literature will obtain a hold, producing evil results, which later Christian efforts will have difficulty in eradicating.

2. Specific Needs.

Publications should be up to date. Old books should be revised or, if unsuitable for present-day needs, be no longer published. The following classes of books are required:—

- (1) Commentaries on the Scriptures, introductions to particular books, Bible dictionaries and expository works.
- (2) High-grade works on theology, Christian philosophy and church history.
- (3) New apologetics, especially Christian biographies; books controverting atheistic and materialistic teaching, and books commending Christianity to Mohammedans.
- (4) Illustrated tracts, ballads and small books in the colloquial style for general use in the home.

- (5) Devotional literature in simple style.
- (6) Christian periodicals for the encouragement of believers, for the advancement of learning and for the extension of the Church.

3. Co-operative Work in Production.

The Societies and individuals engaged in the production of Christian literature should meet and discuss the whole question of co-operative work. There should be a much larger measure of co-operation in this matter than obtains at present, and we should work towards the establishment of a Central Board which could rectify the mistakes of the past and ensure a united progressive policy in such matters as production, nomenclature, printing and distributing.

4. Chinese Co-workers in the Preparation of Literature.

Hitherto the production of Christian literature has been mainly the business of the foreign worker. The time has now arrived when it should become more largely the business of the Christian Chinese scholar. Already talented Chinese writers are rendering good service to the Church, and such men should be encouraged to the fuller production of Chinese literature for which their gifts qualify them. They should more uniformly be regarded as co-workers and be placed in positions of equality with their foreign brethren.

5. Distribution.

- (1) In all large centres union book stores should be established, while colporteurs might be employed to extend the sale of Christian books.
- (2) The Churches should establish reading-rooms, reading societies and circulating libraries.
- (3) The Central Board should prepare a general catalogue of books with short summaries of contents in English and Chinese; also sectional catalogues to meet special needs.
- (4) Churches should appoint a special day as "Literature Sunday" for prayers and offerings.
- (5) Evangelists should use Christian literature in their work and test its adaptation to their purpose.

6. Developing Talent.

- (1) The standard of both English and Chinese studies in schools and colleges should be raised and a translation department established. A special department should also be established in Christian universities to afford training for literary work.
- (2) Missions and Churches should join in selecting capable men, Chinese and foreign, for literary work. The appointment of such men could be either temporary or permanent.
- (3) Young men and women of talent and virtue might be sent abroad to prepare for this form of work.
- (4) Every Church should seek out capable young men and women with talents for literary work, and when they have been trained, they should be given freedom and authority commensurate with their talent. Prizes should be offered to encourage writers and so to discover talent.

7. Statement and Appeal.

To compass the ends outlined, the present staff of men employed in literary work, and the means now at the disposal of the Literature Societies, are pitifully inadequate. This Conference, therefore, strongly appeals to the Missionary and Tract Societies and Boards in the home lands and to the Chinese Churches to furnish sufficient men and money enough to meet the pressing needs.

Moukden Conference

Inasmuch as there is a specially clamant need in these days of China's awakening for original contributions to Christian literature and for translations imparting the best thought of the West, the Church is called upon to set apart workers, both Chinese and foreign, for this field of endeavour. Those who are called to such work should be set free from other responsible missionary duties.

Seoul Conference

1. Range of Christian Literature in Korean Lamentably Small.

This broad field of usefulness in the spread of the knowledge of God and in building up Christians in their most holy faith has hardly been touched. Korea has a far greater number of Christians in proportion to population than any other country in the Far East, as published statistics show, yet while the proportion of Christians and those under Christian influence is so much greater here than in China or in Japan proper, the variety of books and the range of Christian literature in the Korean language is lamentably small compared with that in Chinese or Japanese.

2. The Korean Language and Its Native Script.

The simplicity of the Korean language and its native script, together with its adaptability for all kinds of literature, renders it the finest vehicle in the Far East for the expression of thought.

3. Urgency of the Situation.

The fact that Koreans are not only a literary people, but that a new non-Christian literature is pouring in upon them, makes it urgent that a full range of Christian literature be presented to the reading public. There is a revival of oriental cults, and a reaction of thought towards the old oriental ideals, which make it necessary that books of Christian teaching and atmosphere also be prepared and circulated. The field of Christian effort in general educational work is becoming more and more limited, and therefore education through Christian literature becomes more and more imperative.

4. Literature Needed for Christians.

For Christians there should be provided translations of the classic devotional books of the world, helps to Bible study, books on Christian evidences, apologetics and systematic theology, good church histories and biographies in popular style, and translations of sermons by famous preachers.

5. For Educated Non-Christians.

For educated non-Christians there should be provided a general history, a series of popular science books and books illustrating life and customs in other countries, while more use might well be made of the secular press for the presentation of Christian truth.

6. For the Less Educated Non-Christians.

For the less educated non-Christians, there should be provided elementary evangelistic books and tracts.

7. Literature Production.

With a view to training up able Christian writers both among Christian Koreans and among missionaries, younger missionaries of literary promise should be afforded time and facilities to develop their powers in this direction. Prizes should be offered to Koreans for the best tracts and books on given subjects, while men of ability should be set free for a period from time to time to do special literary work. We feel also that it is essential that the Korean Religious Tract Society should be provided with an editorial department and an efficient staff of writers, Mission Boards represented in Korea being asked to shoulder the financial responsibility in this connection.

8. Distribution and Use of Literature.

To ensure a wider and more effective use of the books already in existence, every missionary should secure copies of new books as published, a fund should be created to provide Korean ministers and helpers with sample copies, and lectures on the literature now in existence should be given at training classes, while pastors or helpers should have a small stock of books on sale and Christian book-rooms should be established in larger centres and market towns.

Tokyo Conference of Missionaries

1. Opportunity in Japan for Christian Literature.

This Conference recognizes in Japan a great field for the spread of Christian ideas by means of the printed page. As regards general reading, activity in publication, press and copyright laws, Japan has reached a state of advancement perhaps without parallel outside the Christian nations.

2. Literary Output of the Secular Movement.

The secular movement has been the means of producing textbooks and technical works, magazines and newspapers, of almost every description. It has also disseminated much erroneous teaching among the educated and a corrupt, popular literature among the masses.

3. Inadequate Supply of Christian Books.

The Christian movement finds itself inadequately supplied with books that are valuable in the study of the Bible, that give right direction to religious and theological thought, that interpret the Christian life and experience and that set forth in popular and wholesome forms truth for the young and for the people in general.

4. The Christian Literature Society.

This Conference looks with hearty approval upon the organization of the Christian Literature Society of Japan and congratulates both the missionary body upon the establishment of this important agency, and the supporting Boards of Missions upon their wise liberality in appropriating funds for this work. This Conference has the fullest confidence in the Christian Literature Society and earnestly commends the same to the confidence and support of the Edinburgh Continuation Committee, of the Boards of Missions in Europe and America and of the general Christian public.

5. Outstanding Needs.

In view of the organization and competence of the Christian Literature Society, this Conference considers it unwise and unnecessary to make recommendations in detail, but desires to call attention to the following outstanding needs:—

- (1) An endowment fund for the promotion of the work of the Christian Literature Society.
- (2) Reading circles and other similar agencies organized throughout the Empire to raise up a purchasing constituency and to multiply readers of Christian books.
- (3) A liberal annual allowance granted to all missionaries by their respective Mission Boards or Societies for the purchase and distribution of Christian literature.

Tokyo Conference of Japanese Leaders

1. Neglect With Respect to Christian Literature.

There is no need to emphasize the importance of the contribution of Christian literature to the education of the nation and to the culture of believers. But the Christian world has neglected endeavours in this direction, compared with its other evangelistic activities.

2. Books Needed for Christians.

A provisional list of the books most needed by Christians comprises:—

- Biblical commentaries.
- Devotional works.
- Expositions of Christian doctrine.
- A life of Christ.
- Lives of Christians.
- Reading for children and the home.
- Sunday school literature.
- Instruction books on sacred music.

3. Literature Needed for Non-Christians.

For unbelievers the desiderata are:—

- New apologetics.
- Explanations of the relations of Christianity to the State and to society.
- A comparative study of religions.
- The life and teachings of Christ.
- Religious narratives.
- Experiences of Christians.
- Tracts briefly explaining the essence of Christianity.

4. The Christian Literature Society.

Since the Christian Literature Society organized by the Federated Missions has begun the work of preparing needed books and translations, we hope that this Society will devote its best endeavours to the satisfaction of these needs. At the same time we recognize the imperative need of providing suitable means for the support of competent persons set apart for the tasks of writing and translating.

5. Quarterly Review.

We recognize the urgent need of a quarterly to expound Christianity to the most educated classes and to furnish an authoritative religious, philosophical and literary review.

6. Christian Daily Newspaper.

We believe that the time has come to establish a Christian daily newspaper to review unreservedly current events from the Christian point of view, report correctly the Christian movement and provide adequate reading for the family. For this an endowment of at least Yen 300,000 should be gathered at home and abroad. This would bring about the dissemination of Christian influence throughout society.

7. Lecture Foundations in Theological Schools.

For the purpose of promoting the study of Christian literature, this Conference favours the establishment of lecture foundations in theological schools. In order to carry this into effect we propose the appointment of a special committee of ten members by the Joint Committee.

Japan National Conference

1. Japan as a Field for Christian Literature.

This Conference recognizes in Japan a great field for the spread of Christian ideas by means of the printed page. As regards general reading, activity in publication, press and copyright laws, Japan has reached a state of advancement perhaps without parallel outside the Christian nations.

2. Results of the Secular Movement.

The secular movement has been the means of producing textbooks and technical works, magazines and newspapers, of almost every description. It has also disseminated much erroneous teaching among the educated and a corrupt popular literature among the masses.

3. Kinds of Christian Books Needed.

The Christian movement finds itself inadequately supplied with books in the following classes:—

Bible commentaries, concordances and other helps.

Books on the life of Christ.

Devotional books.

Books on Christian experience.

Christian biography.

Books for children and the home.

Sunday school books.

Expositions of Christian doctrine.

New apologetics.

Books on the comparative study of religion.

Books on Christianity in relation to the State and to society.

Books on Christian art and sacred music; also poetical works.

Tracts and handbooks explaining the essence of the Christian religion.

Books of fiction having a Christian tone.

4. The Christian Literature Society of Japan.

This Conference looks with hearty approval upon the organization of the Christian Literature Society of Japan and earnestly commends it to the confidence and support of the Federation of Churches and of the general Christian public in Japan, to the Boards of Missions in Europe and America and to the Continuation Committee of the Edinburgh Conference. Attention is called to the need of an endowment fund for the promotion of the work of the Society.

5. Financial Support for Literature Production.

We recognize the imperative need of providing suitable means for the support of competent persons set apart for the tasks of writing and translating, as well as of encouraging those actively engaged in Christian work to produce religious literature.

6. A Religious, Philosophical and Literary Review Needed.

We recognize the urgent need of a periodical to expound Christianity to the thoughtful people of the nation and to furnish a religious, philosophical and literary review of commanding character.

7. A Daily Newspaper Governed by Christian Principles.

We believe that a daily newspaper governed by Christian principles is urgently needed, and we request the Continuation Committee of Japan to consider the practical questions pertaining to the establishment of such a paper.

8. Agencies and Methods for Spreading Christian Literature.

Reading circles, circulating libraries and similar agencies should be organized throughout the Empire to raise up a purchasing constituency and to multiply readers of Christian books.

9. Mission Grants for Literature Purposes.

The Mission Boards should grant to their Missions a liberal annual allowance for the purchase and distribution of Christian literature and Japanese Churches should aid their pastors so far as possible in the circulation of good books.

10. Lecture Foundations in Theological Schools.

For the purpose of promoting the creation of Christian literature the establishment of lecture foundations in theological schools should be encouraged.

VIII
CO-OPERATION

VIII. CO-OPERATION

Tasks vast in their scope and bewildering in their details and a force of less than 12,800 missionaries confronting populations of almost eight hundred millions—half of the human race—demand a mighty synergy,—the correlation and co-operation of all the societies labouring in those countries and the co-working power of an Almighty God.

Happily the lands under review lead the van of Christendom in their development of Christian federation and co-operation. In India the Federation of Christian Churches embraces more than a score of Missionary Societies, and within this Federation smaller groups are one in name and polity. The movement is widely developed in China, both in provincial councils and in the agitation for a National Federation Council. Co-operation there is common in educational and literary programmes, as also in certain items of comity, and the Church aspires to one name. In Korea the close union of the General Council of Protestant Evangelical Missions, established in 1905, has developed into the Federal Council of Missions of 1913, a delegate body with powers approved by the six leading Missions, whereas the General Council was merely advisory. Japan's Conference of Federated Missions, now in its twelfth year, consists of twenty-six missions, not counting different divisions of a single denomination's work. Christian literature, education and distribution of forces owe much to it.

With such a basis for co-operation, the Continuation Committee Conferences do not argue their case; they simply proceed to a strengthening and elaboration of programme. The principle of the subordination of the interest of individual societies to the highest good of the wider cause, Madras somewhat radically formulates: "The Conference feels that the time has come for all the Missionary Societies to recognize that the wider interests of the Kingdom of God must always have the priority over the rights and privileges of individual Missions, provided that this principle be carried out without prejudice to the liberty of conscience of individual Christians." The activities which are to be co-operatively carried on are varied. Newly arrived missionaries are to be taught the language and other necessary field subjects in union training schools, where they will mingle most intimately as Christians and not as denominationalists. The Churches will in many cases sing the same hymns; their members will receive "spiritual hospitality" when remote from their own denominational body; their youth will be educated in union high schools and colleges, while their ministry is to be trained in union theological institutions; their sick will be cared for in union dispensaries and hospitals. Union in evangelistic campaigns, summer schools, publication houses, and periodicals is also advocated. More than one Conference urged that Missions of the same denominational families become organically one; while the Japanese go a step further in their declaration: "It is the sincere hope and earnest prayer of every Christian man and woman that all the Churches representing Christianity in Japan may come together and be made one in Christ, with one faith, one order, and one work; but we think it will be some time before this high ideal can be realized."

To bring this inspiring hope to its fruition, India, China, Korea and Japan have appointed Continuation Committees. The constitution of the China Continuation Committee and the main objects of the Field Advisory Committee of Korea are prophetic of the better things to come. Re-surveys of the field are already partly provided for in India and China, with a view to a better alignment of forces and the elimination of overlapping and friction. Though the functions of these Committees are to be solely consultative and advisory, not legislative or mandatory, they are certain to carry a weight which will quietly help to remove existing defects and introduce the best methods and policies of our day. These changes come at an opportune time; for national consciousness is rapidly developing; and with it comes the natural criticism of an enterprise that is essentially Occidental and not always adapted to existing conditions, but which will henceforth be international with an Oriental emphasis and will consequently be undertaken as the programme of a world-wide Christianity naturalizing itself in Asia.

Colombo Conference

1. Another All-Ceylon Conference Recommended.

This Conference being of the opinion that conferences, similar in constitution and functions to the present one, held at regular intervals, would greatly promote the growth of the Church of Christ and the extension of the Kingdom of God in Ceylon, resolves to recommend to the missionary bodies here represented, that they should sanction the holding of the first of such conferences in 1914.

2. Appointment of a Standing Committee.

It further appoints a Standing Committee of the Ceylon Missionary Conference. This Standing Committee shall receive and consider suggestions from the missionary bodies concerned; collect and circulate information on points referred to it, and in other ways facilitate co-operation and co-ordination; make the necessary arrangements for the holding of the next Ceylon Missionary Conference and prepare its programme, etc. The Standing Committee shall be empowered to fill vacancies in the Committee which may arise in the interval between the Ceylon Conferences, and to appoint special committees to consider and report on questions submitted to it by the missionary bodies. The Committee names follow:—

Madras Conference

1. Principles of Comity More Widely Applicable.

The Conference, while recognizing the progress that has been made in recent years in the matter of comity, holds that further applications of the principles of comity are possible and desirable, more especially in the matters of scales of salaries, church discipline, and the reception of workers from other Missions.

2. Wider Interests of the Kingdom of God.

The Conference feels that the time has come for all Missionary Societies to recognize that the wider interests of the Kingdom of God must always have priority over the rights and privileges of individual Missions, provided that this principle be carried out without prejudice to the liberty of conscience of individual Christians.

3. Separation of Mission Centres.

The Conference realizes that there is a loud call for more direct preaching of the Gospel all through the land and urges the importance of Missions uniting for this purpose. But in the matter of establishing institutions for organized work the Conference holds that a true spirit of co-operation requires that the centres of different Missions should be more widely separated than is sometimes the case at present.

4. Establishing New Centres.

Considering the fact that in the Presidency there is not more than one mission worker, European or Indian, to 5,000 people, and that owing to the necessary concentration of many workers in institutions the proportion available for village work is much less than this, the Conference holds that a wise and careful distribution of the missionary force requires that in any village with a population of 5,000 or less where one Mission has established organized work, other Missions should not be established except by mutual agreement. The Conference recommends that in establishing new centres every effort should be made to enter fields where no work has already been begun.

5. Furtherance of Comity.

The Conference recommends that Missions take care to acquaint their missionaries, especially those newly entering on their work, with the principles of missionary comity, and that Indian Churches which undertake missionary operations should work in accordance with such principles of comity as have been found most helpful in the case of Missionary Societies.

6. Intra-Mission Correlation.

The Conference recommends that each Mission endeavour to secure the maximum of correlation of its own mission activities.

7. The Board of Arbitration.

The Conference commends the work of the Board of Arbitration and expresses the hope that those Societies which have not seen their way to adopt the principles on which it is based, will once more take the matter into their most earnest consideration and appoint representatives to the Board.

8. Conference on Faith and Order.

The Conference feels that there is an urgent need for a conference on Faith and Order to be convened by the Federal Missionary Council of South India [see below].

9. Continuation Committee Helpfulness.

The Conference suggests the following as the most helpful ways in which the Continuation Committee can be of service to South Indian Missions:—

- (1) Keeping in touch with all that is going on and suggesting developments.
- (2) Endeavouring to secure the adoption of the principle of arbitration by such societies in the West as have not yet seen their way to appoint representatives to the Board of Arbitration.

10. Federal Missionary Council of South India.

The Conference resolves that a Federal Missionary Council, representative of the Missionary Societies and Church organizations at work in South India, be appointed.

11. Duties.

The duties of this Council shall be:—

- (1) To keep in touch with the work of these Societies and organizations in South India and to take such action as may seem desirable to further their interests.
- (2) To carry on its work chiefly by the formation of special committees. The Council shall have power to appoint on these committees not only its own members but also any other missionary or other person interested in mission work.

- (3) To decide when a further conference of South Indian missionaries shall be held and to make the initial arrangements for such a conference.

12. Relationships.

The Council shall be the body which shall relate the Christian forces of South India with those in other parts of India, and through the Continuation Committee of the Edinburgh Conference with the home base.

13. How Constituted.

The Council shall consist of a number of members of whom the greater part shall be representatives, both Indian and foreign, elected by Missionary Societies or Church organizations. The remaining part shall be co-opted by the representative members.

14. Interim Committee.

An interim committee shall be appointed whose duty it shall be to take all the necessary steps to constitute the proposed Council. The members of the interim committee shall be:—

Rev. J. Cooling, Convener,	John Matthai,
Rev. J. Aberly, D.D.,	Rev. A. Parker,
Rev. V. S. Azariah,	Rev. J. H. Maclean,
Bishop-designate,	Rev. K. Pamperrien,
Miss M. Bretherton,	K. T. Paul,
Rev. E. S. Carr,	Rev. G. Pittendrigh,
Rev. W. L. Ferguson, D.D.,	Bishop J. E. Robinson, D.D.,
Miss P. Grover,	Rev. L. R. Scudder, M.D.,
Rev. J. P. Jones, D.D.,	Rev. Canon G. H. Smith.

Bombay Conference

1. Comity.

This Conference recognizes with profound gratitude to God a growing willingness on the part of the Missions to observe the principles of comity, but considers that there is still room for the more definite recognition of the principles in regard to the following particulars:—

- (1) The reception by any Church of members of another Communion who are under discipline.
- (2) The employment of agents who have served in other Missions.
- (3) The entrance for the purpose of aggressive work by new or old Missions into areas already occupied.

2. Interim Committee.

This Conference recommends that an Interim Committee be appointed to approach the Missions working in Western India with reference to the formation of a Representative Council, for the collection of information regarding the field and for the communication of the same to the various Missions, for correspondence with any similar council in India and with the Continuation Committee, for facilitating the communication to the various Missions of definite proposals for co-operation, and for any other work which may be referred to this Council by the Missions which are represented on it.

3. Committee Members.

To give effect to the above finding the Conference appoints the Bishop of Bombay, Rev. W. H. Hannum, Rev. R. E. Hume, PH.D., Rev. Canon D. L. Joshi, Rev. D. Mackichan, D.D., Rev. J. F. Steele, and Rev. W. H. Stephens to form the Interim Committee.

4. Fuller Knowledge of the Field.

The Conference believes that the observance of the principles of comity would be greatly facilitated by such fuller knowledge of the field as could be acquired and distributed by the proposed Representative Council.

Jubbulpore Conference

1. Full Observance of Comity.

While thankful that the principle of comity is so generally observed within this area, we urge Missions to exercise all due care to secure the full observance of this principle in entering territory contiguous to other Missions or in which other Missions are already working, and also in the reception of members or in the employment of agents from other Missions. We urge that prior to any action being taken by missionaries in such matters, efforts should be made to arrive at an understanding with those immediately concerned.

2. Practical Co-operation.

We suggest that in all centres or districts where there is more than one Mission at work, these Missions should consider how far it is possible to unite on questions of education, of the training of Indian agents, of other missionary agencies, and in the production and distribution of Christian literature. We suggest that these Missions appoint standing committees whose special concern would be the promotion of co-operative effort.

3. United Meetings.

With a view to the promotion of the growth of the spiritual unity of the Christian Church, we urge all missionaries of the area to avail themselves of every opportunity of meeting for prayer and for mutual counsel on matters concerning the spread of Christ's Kingdom in India and for cultivating mutual acquaintance and acquiring a fuller knowledge of and a deeper interest in one another's work.

4. Council.

With a view to meeting the need of having a body organically related to the Missions of this area and in a position to represent their interests to the Edinburgh Conference Continuation Committee, this Conference instructs its delegates to the National Conference at Calcutta to obtain information in consultation with it as to the most suitable method of attaining this end and to take steps to carry it into effect. We suggest conferring with the Mid-India Missionary Association as to the possibility of adjusting its constitution, if need be, to meet the requirements.

Allahabad Conference

1. Provincial Council.

This Conference recommends:—

- (1) That a Provincial Council be formed in the United Provinces to take action in the following matters relating to all Missions working within this area:—

- a. To prepare a survey of the field.
 - b. To co-operate with the Edinburgh Continuation Committee.
 - c. To facilitate co-operation in missionary policy and activity.
- (2) That this Council be constituted as follows: One representative chosen by each of the following Missions:— American Presbyterian Mission, Church Missionary Society, London Missionary Society, Methodist Episcopal Mission, the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel and the Wesleyan Methodist Missionary Society. These representatives shall co-opt additional members, both Indian and foreign, bringing the Council up to a total strength of fifteen members.
 - (3) That the Executive Committee of this Conference be requested to arrange for the appointment of the above six representatives.
 - (4) That the Behar Missionary Union be asked to arrange for a similar Council to represent that territory to the Edinburgh Continuation Committee.

2. Missionary Conferences in Stations.

We recommend the organization of missionary conferences in all stations where more than one Society is working, and that these conferences should provide for the adequate representation of the Indian Christian community.

3. Annual Station Meeting of All Workers.

We favour the holding of an annual meeting of all mission workers in a station to frame a policy for the coming year, and to secure the correlation of all missionary activities undertaken by them.

4. United Evangelistic Efforts.

We recommend that the various Missionary Societies working within given areas occasionally mass their forces for special united evangelistic effort.

5. United Summer Schools.

We suggest that, wherever possible, united summer schools be held in suitable centres for the edification of our Indian agents, both men and women.

6. Transfer of Mission Agents.

We strongly urge that in the case of an agent applying for employment after service with another Mission, inquiry should always be made of the recognized authority of the Mission under which he has last served, and that no appointment be made solely upon such written recommendations as may be presented by the applicant.

7. Mutual Recognition of Discipline.

We recommend that greater care should be taken to ensure that members under discipline in one Church be not received into another Church without consultation between the pastors of the Churches concerned.

Lahore Conference

1. Federal Council.

It is the opinion of the Conference that a Federal Council be formed for the territory covered by this Conference.

- (1) The powers of the Council shall be only advisory.
- (2) The composition of the Council and the nature of the duties assigned to it shall be determined by the members of the Conference appointed to the National Conference of the Continuation Committee to be held in Calcutta.
- (3) The Council shall appoint its own Executive Committee and such other Committees as may be deemed advisable from time to time.
- (4) The Council shall draft a constitution in accordance with the general principles above laid down, which shall be adopted by them after having been submitted for criticism and suggestion to the various Missions concerned.
- (5) The Council shall be in correspondence with other similarly constituted Councils throughout India, and with the Edinburgh Continuation Committee.

- (6) The Federal Council shall attempt to lay down principles of comity with regard to the delimitation of territory, the transfer of mission workers, persons under discipline and other similar matters and recommend their acceptance to the individual Missions.

2. Interim Committee.

The following members of this Conference shall constitute an Interim Committee to carry these recommendations into effect:

Rev. J. C. R. Ewing, D.D., Convener,

Miss K. M. Bose, M.B.,

Lieut.-Col. W. C. Duce,

Rev. J. C. Butcher, M.D.,

Rev. R. Maxwell,

S. K. Datta, M.B.,

Canon E. F. E. Wigram.

3. Powers of Interim Committee.

Until the Federal Council shall have been formed the Interim Committee shall be empowered by this Conference to act for this Council. It shall review the findings of this Conference, and take such steps as may be deemed advisable to carry into effect the recommendations contained therein, as well as deal with all matters relating to co-operation between Missions, such as the survey of the field, the occupation of unoccupied territory, the better distribution of our forces, joint action in any form of mission work, and all other matters of a similar nature.

4. The Holy Communion and the Spirit of Comity.

This Conference desires to put upon record its thankful appreciation of the spirit of Christian love and co-operation that prevails among us; at the same time it has to be recognized, with whatever regret, that we belong to various branches of the Church of Christ which on certain questions of order and polity hold divergent views, and that in these circumstances it is our duty to avoid everything that tends to make obvious and thus to accentuate our differences. It is therefore resolved that in the judgment of this Conference it is, for the present, advisable for us to refrain from considering that the absence of the observance of the Sacrament of the Holy Communion at interdenominational gatherings implies a lack of the spirit of unity.

Calcutta Conference

1. A Representative Council for North-east India.

This Conference resolves to take steps for the formation of a Representative Council of Christian Missions for North-east India.

2. Area Represented.

Subject to such rearrangement as may be suggested by any National Council that may come into existence, or may be mutually agreed upon, the area represented in the Council shall be Bengal, Assam, Independent Sikkim, Orissa and Chota Nagpur.

3. Objects of the Council.

The principal objects of the Council shall be as follows:—

- (1) To be a means of communication with similarly constituted councils in other Provinces, with the National Council, in the event of such a Council being formed, and with the Continuation Committee of the World Missionary Conference.
- (2) To promote the spirit of unity and co-operation among Missions, more especially along the following lines:—
The completion of the survey of the field; the preparation of a statement of the principles of missionary comity to be presented to the Missions for acceptance; the promotion of co-operation in missionary education under such aspects as the training of teachers, elementary and secondary; higher Christian education; theological training; the preparation of Christian literature; the formation of a language school for missionaries, and all other matters in which joint action is desirable in the opinion of this Conference.

4. Membership of the Council.

This Council shall consist of representatives appointed by the Missions, together with co-opted members to the extent of fifty per cent. of the members thus elected.

5. Appointment of Special Committees.

For the furtherance of the above objects this Council may appoint committees for special purposes or special areas, and these need not be composed entirely of members of the Council.

6. Meeting the Financial Needs of the Council.

This Conference recommends that in view of the urgent importance of carrying the above proposals into effect, home Societies be approached through local secretaries with the request that they should allocate funds proportionate to their representation on the field, to enable the financial needs to be met.

7. Appointment of a Temporary Committee.

This Conference resolves that a Temporary Committee be appointed to bring the Council into existence, that this Committee be constituted as follows, with power to add to their number; that the Rev. Herbert Anderson be Convener and that all the findings of this Conference which call for action be referred to this Committee:—

Rev. H. Anderson, Convener,	Rev. R. Gee,
Prof. J. R. Banerjee,	Rev. G. H. Hamlen,
Rev. Canon A. N. Banerjee,	Rev. F. W. Harding,
Rev. Canon E. F. Brown,	Rev. G. Howells, PH.D.,
Rev. W. G. Brockway,	Rev. J. Macrae,
E. C. Carter,	Rev. D. H. Manley,
The Bishop of Chota Nagpur,	Prof. S. C. Mukerji,
Rev. J. Culshaw,	Rev. G. W. Olver,
Rev. B. Das,	Miss E. G. Sandys,
Rev. J. M. B. Duncan,	Rev. E. T. Sandys,
Miss A. Ewing,	Rev. J. Watt, D.D.,
Rev. J. C. Evans,	Rev. P. Wagner,
Rev. J. A. Graham, D.D.,	Rev. A. W. Young.

8. Co-operation in Teacher Training and in Higher Education.

This Conference recommends that the particular attention of the temporary Committee and of the Council be directed to considering the feasibility of co-operation on interdenominational lines in the training of elementary teachers at Krishnagar, in the training of secondary teachers at Bhawanipore, in higher Christian education in connection with the Scottish Churches College, and in theological training at Serampore.

9. Prayer for Unity.

The members of this Conference resolve to pray daily to God to give true unity to all His followers on the basis of truth and love, and to encourage others to pray for the same great end.

India National Conference

1. Manifestations of Unity and of Fuller Co-operation.

This Conference desires to put upon record its thankfulness to God for the spirit of Christian love and co-operation that has marked the proceedings of the Conferences recently held, alike provincial and national, and rejoices in the greater facilities and opportunities for still further manifestations of unity and of fuller co-operation in the various branches of mission work thus secured.

2. Provincial Councils.

This Conference notes that in the findings of the various Provincial Conferences there is general recognition of the desirability of the formation of provincial bodies in some form to promote the work of co-operation and in various ways to increase the efficiency of the Church's work. To give effect to this desire the Conference recommends the formation of Provincial Councils on the following basis:—

(1) Name:—

- a. Collectively, the Provincial Representative Councils of Missions.
- b. Individually, the Madras (or other name) Representative Council of Missions.

(2) Objects:—

- a. To facilitate co-operation in missionary policy and activity.
- b. To co-operate with the Edinburgh Continuation Committee.

(3) Duties:—

- c. Additional co-opted members, in the selection of whom special consideration should be given to the adequate representation of important interests.

NOTE 1.—A Provincial Council may be formed either by the adaptation of existing agencies in such way as to conform to the main principles indicated above or by the formation of a new body for the purpose.

NOTE 2.—The functions of the Councils to be solely consultative and advisory, not legislative or mandatory.

3. National Council.

With a view to co-ordinating the activities of the Provincial Councils the Conference resolves to take steps for the formation of a National Council in accordance with the following plan:—

- (2) The objects of the Council shall be:—

- b. Members shall be elected to serve for a period of three years, one-third retiring by rotation each year.

NOTE 1.—The Provincial areas shall be understood to be those on the basis of which the recent Continuation Committee Conferences have been held, subject to such rearrangement as may be suggested by the National Council or as may be mutually agreed upon.

NOTE 2.—The functions of the Council shall be solely consultative and advisory and not legislative or mandatory.

NOTE 3.—The above is submitted as a draft scheme for the formation of the Council, but is subject to such amplification or modification by the Council itself as experience may suggest or need require.

NOTE 4.—The formation of the Council shall be entrusted to an Interim Committee to be appointed by this Conference.

4. Interim Committee.

This Conference resolves that an Interim Committee be appointed, with power to fill vacancies.

(1) Objects:—

- a. To take steps to bring into existence the National Missionary Council.

5. Avoiding Breaches of Comity.

To avoid breaches of comity it is desirable that special attention be paid in all areas to the following matters, in connection with which difficulties have frequently occurred:—

- (1) Delimitation of territory.
- (2) Transfer of mission workers.
- (3) Scales of salaries of workers in the area.
- (4) Treatment of persons under discipline.

6. Promoting Comity and Co-operation.

For the more active promotion of comity and co-operation it is desirable:—

- (1) That spiritual hospitality be offered to persons of whatever denomination who may find themselves in an area in which the ministrations of their own Communion are not procurable.

- (2) That all missionaries of the area be urged to avail themselves of every opportunity of meeting for prayer and mutual counsel on matters concerning the spread of Christ's Kingdom in India and of cultivating mutual acquaintance and acquiring a fuller knowledge of and a deeper interest in one another's work.
- (3) That an annual meeting of all mission workers in a station be held to frame a policy for the coming year, and to secure the correlation of all missionary activities undertaken by them.
- (4) That the various Missionary Societies working within given areas occasionally mass their forces for special united evangelistic effort.
- (5) That wherever possible united summer schools be held in suitable centres for the edification of Indian workers, both men and women.
- (6) That every effort be made to co-operate in various forms of work, educational, medical, etc., and also in the production and distribution of Christian literature.
- (7) That each Mission within the area be urged to recognize the importance of paying attention in its own activities to the proper correlation of the various forms of missionary work.

7. Arbitration.

Believing that the Board of Arbitration constituted by the Madras Decennial Conference is of much value, this Conference desires to reaffirm the principle of arbitration and to ask for the serious reconsideration of the question on the part of any bodies which have not as yet seen their way to joining the Board.

8. Summons to Prayer for Unity.

In conclusion, this Conference, feeling certain that the unity of Christendom is in accordance with the Divine purpose and is the means by which above all else the world will be brought to recognize in our Jesus Christ their Saviour and Redeemer, and thankfully recognizing the many evidences that at the present time this truth is being brought home to the hearts and consciences of Christians all over the world by the manifest working of the Holy Spirit of peace and love, most earnestly calls upon all to whom its voice may come to be instant in believing prayer to the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, that He will vouchsafe speedily to accomplish His gracious purpose and hasten the day when the prayer of our Redeemer may be fulfilled, and all His people be perfected into one.

Rangoon Conference

1. National Findings on Co-operation Approved with Alterations.

The task of drawing up the report of this Committee has been greatly lightened by the fact that it has had before it the conclusions arrived at by the National Conference held in Calcutta, December 18th to 21st, 1912, on the subject of Co-operation. After careful consideration the Committee has decided to adopt as its report that part of the findings of the National Conference which refers to Co-operation, with certain alterations which are incorporated in the following statement.

2. Declaration of Belief and Record of Thankfulness.

United in belief in the Divinity of our Lord Jesus Christ, as expressed in the Apostles' and Nicene Creeds, and in the conviction that Holy Scripture doth contain all things necessary to man's salvation, this Conference desires to put on record its thankfulness to God for the spirit of Christian love and co-operation that has marked its meetings, and rejoices in the greater facilities and opportunities for still further manifestations of unity and of fuller co-operation in the various branches of mission work thus secured.

3. Provincial Council.

This Conference notes that there is general recognition of the desirability of the formation of a provincial body to promote the work of co-operation and in various ways to increase the efficiency of the Church's work. To give effect to this desire the Conference recommends the formation of a Provincial Council on the following basis:—

- (1) Name:—The Burma Council of Christian Missions.

- (2) Objects.*
- (3) Duties.*
- (4) Methods.*
- (5) Composition.*
- (6) Interim Committee:—This Conference resolves that an Interim Committee be appointed, with power to fill vacancies, to take steps to bring into existence the Provincial Missionary Council, and to give effect to the findings of this Conference in so far as provision is not made for this by the appointment of special committees by the Conference itself. The Interim Committee shall consist of the following members:—

The Bishop of Rangoon, Convener,

Rev. E. J. Bradford,

Rev. D. Gilmore,

Rev. G. Gnanachariam,

Rev. B. M. Jones,

O. H. McCowen,

Rev. W. Sherratt.

4. National Council.

With a view to co-ordinating the activities of the Provincial Councils, the Conference approves of the steps taken for the formation of a National Council in accordance with the following plan:— †

Singapore Conference

1. General Suggestions as to Comity.

To avoid breaches of comity, it is desirable that special attention be paid in all mission districts to the following matters, in connection with which difficulties may easily occur: transfer of mission workers; scales of salaries of workers; treatment of persons under discipline; establishment of new institutions. For the more active promotion of comity and co-operation, it is desirable:—

- (1) That all missionaries be urged to avail themselves of

* For (2)–(5), see under Co-operation, India National Conference findings, in section headed "Provincial Councils."

† For Name, Objects, Methods, Constitution, Comity and Co-operation, and Summons to Prayer, see under Co-operation, India National Conference findings, in the section headed "National Council," and in those following. These sections, as given in the India National Conference findings, are repeated in the Rangoon Conference findings, except that the sections on Interim Committee and on Arbitration, of the India National Conference findings, are omitted in those of the Rangoon Conference.

opportunities of meeting for prayer and mutual counsel on matters concerning the spread of Christ's Kingdom in this area, of cultivating mutual acquaintance, and of acquiring a fuller knowledge of and a deeper interest in one another's work.

- (2) That the various Missionary Societies working within given areas consider the possibility of occasionally massing their forces for special united evangelistic effort.
- (3) That more attention be paid to co-operation in various forms of work, educational, medical, etc., and also to the production and distribution of Christian literature.
- (4) That each Mission be urged to recognize the importance of paying attention, in its own activities, to the proper correlation of the various forms of missionary work.

2. Advisory Council and Interim Committee.

It is the sense of this Conference that there should be an Advisory Council for this field, and it appoints an Interim Committee of not more than fifteen to study the subject, and to seek the opinions and recommendations of the different Societies, and with power to call together a Conference similar to this, when in its judgment such a Conference is desirable. To such Conference all Missionary Societies working in this field are to be invited to send representatives. This Conference appoints the following to constitute this Interim Committee:—

FOR THE BRITISH SPHERE.

Rev. W. G. Shellabear, Convener,
W. D. Ashdown,
Rev. J. A. B. Cook,
The Bishop of Labuan and Sarawak,
The Bishop of Singapore.

FOR THE DUTCH SPHERE.

The Mission Consul, Convener,
Rev. C. S. Buchanan, together with not more than eight members to represent the Dutch Societies.

3. Summons to Prayer.

In conclusion the Conference feels certain that the unity of Christendom is in accordance with the Divine purpose, and is the means by which, above all else, the world will be brought to recognize in our Lord Jesus Christ their Saviour and Redeemer; and thankfully recognizes the many evidences that at the present time this truth is being brought home to the hearts and consciences of Christians all over the world by the manifest working of the Holy Spirit. It therefore most earnestly calls upon all to whom its voice may come, to be instant in believing prayer to the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ that He will vouchsafe speedily to accomplish His gracious purpose, and hasten the day when the prayer of our Redeemer may be fulfilled, and all His people be perfected into one.

Canton Conference

1. Basis.

This Conference adopts as the basis of action the report unanimously adopted by the Shanghai Conference of 1907. That report recommended national federation, with a national council and provincial councils, whose findings should be purely advisory and in no wise mandatory or binding upon the participating bodies, for the purpose of promoting co-operation in literary, educational, medical and evangelistic work. In carrying out the Shanghai programme we assume that co-operation always includes co-operation with the Chinese on equal terms in all national and provincial councils, with the expectation that they will as speedily and fully as possible assume responsibility and leadership. This co-operation is open to all who accept the teachings of the Apostles' Creed, whether belonging to organizations already existing or to any Chinese or foreign organization hereafter formed.

2. Christian Literature in General.

In pursuance of the above we recommend that the various Missions speedily and largely reinforce the Christian Literature Society by contributing men and money. Publishing houses and interests should be united so far as practicable. There should be united effort for the rapid production of literature in the various dialects. We request the various publication societies to use union terms in the works they issue.

3. One Hundred Standard Hymns.

There should be a selection of one hundred standard hymns and a common translation of the same, prefaced by this petition:—

Grant us, we beseech Thee, Almighty God, that by the power of Thy Spirit the prayer of our Saviour, that His people may be sanctified in the truth and may be one in order that the world may believe that Thou hast sent Him, may speedily be fulfilled, for His sake. Amen.

Each Church may add to the common hymnal such hymns, creeds and forms of service as it desires.

4. Primary and Intermediate Schools.

Each Mission should continue to maintain as many primary and intermediate schools as it is able to support, and in these schools, besides Bible reading and daily worship, each Mission should furnish such religious instruction as shall best convey its interpretation of the Christian life.

5. Union Middle Schools and Colleges.

Inasmuch as the middle schools and colleges are located in large cities occupied by Missions in common, and as the cost of maintaining such colleges as are absolutely essential is beyond the reach of a single Mission, and inasmuch as the sciences taught in these schools are incapable of sectarian interpretation, we recommend union in all such work, the religious instruction being confined to the Bible and doctrines common to Christendom, each participating Church to give such further religious instruction as it deems desirable in the hostels connected with the schools and colleges.

6. Union Theological Instruction.

Inasmuch as the provision for training of the highest type is beyond the ability of any one Mission, we recommend union theological instruction, wherever practicable. Where such union has been attempted theological differences have not caused complications.

7. An Educational Commissioner for China.

We approve the action of the China Educational Association in appointing an educational commissioner for China. Recognizing the importance of the standardization and correlation of all Christian educational work and the adaptation of this to government work, we heartily commend the appointment of additional superintendents of education, either Chinese or foreign, for the various sections of China.

8. Union Normal Schools.

Since not only the curricula but also the methods of study are being revolutionized in China, we regard the establishment of union normal schools or normal courses as one of the most urgent needs. In the meantime we favour instruction in pedagogy in union summer schools, in advanced schools and in colleges, to help Chinese teachers to meet the present crisis. We especially urge that the dignity and influence of the teacher's profession be emphasized in order to encourage a larger number of young men and women to devote their lives to training the young.

9. Union Hospitals and Medical Schools.

Inasmuch as the Medical Missionary Association of China, in view of the rapidly advancing standard of modern medical practice in the nation, has recommended that no further hospitals be established until each existing hospital can be manned with at least two foreign physicians and, if possible, with one foreign nurse, we make the following recommendations:—

- (1) That so far as it is practicable, Missions unite in properly manning one hospital in each centre, instead of maintaining additional hospitals in that centre.
- (2) That they also unite in medical schools in connection with and on the same basis as the union colleges.

10. Spiritual Hospitality.

To further the interests of co-operation, we recommend that the various Churches extend spiritual hospitality as far as consistent with their conscientious convictions, admitting to the privileges of fellowship members of other Communion bringing proper certificates from the Churches with which they are connected.

11. Comity in the Recognition of Church Discipline.

We recommend that the discipline of individuals by any Church be recognized by all other Churches so far as they are notified of the same, such notification to be sent to all neighbouring Churches by the Church administering the discipline. Agents dismissed by one Christian organization should not be employed by another without the concurrence of the authorities dismissing them.

12. A Common Name for all Christian Churches.

We suggest that a common name for all the Churches united in the National Council be proposed by the Continuation Committee National Conference, and be promulgated for adoption by the participating bodies, so far as they desire to adopt it. The statistics of all Churches uniting in this common Church could be reported in the aggregate, each branch being at liberty to use these aggregate statistics, provided that at the same time it states the portion of the common work which that branch is doing, thus avoiding false impressions.

13. Fraternal Connection between Chinese and Western Churches.

As the teachings of the New Testament contemplate a universal Church of Christ as the goal of history, we recommend that the various branches of the Chinese Church be encouraged to maintain their fraternal connections with the Western Churches for the more speedy realization of this aim.

14. Union Language Schools.

We recommend the establishment of union language schools wherever the number of students warrants it, and that they offer advanced courses to help and stimulate those who have already passed the initial examinations.

15. A School for the Children of Missionaries.

A school for the children of missionaries should be established in some central location at a sufficient elevation above the sea level to ensure a cool and bracing atmosphere during the summer.

16. Co-operation in Framing Mission Policies.

In the interests of co-operation each Mission in this area is requested to frame as clear a plan of future policy as practicable and these plans should be interchanged through the executive committees of the Provincial Federation Councils; or the Missions in any given area might unite in a study of their field, and jointly frame the plans and policies to be followed.

17. Giving Effect to the Conference Findings.

We recommend the adoption by the coming National Conference of measures for giving speedy effect to the findings of the conferences now being held in China.

18. Prayer.

Finally, recognizing that our deepest union is and ever must be spiritual, we urge, above all, that constant prayer be offered by each Church for the prosperity of all other Churches; and that union services be held at convenient centres for confession of the sin of division and for united prayer for the reunion of Christendom.

Shanghai Conference

1. Reinforcement of the Christian Literature Society.

The Conference recommends the speedy and large reinforcement of the Christian Literature Society by the various Missions at work in China contributing men and money to that work.

2. Union of Publishing Houses and Literature Agencies.

We favour the uniting of our publishing houses and our distributing agencies so far as practicable. Especially we recommend the establishment in Shanghai of one large centre for the distribution of Christian literature.

3. One Hundred Standard Hymns.

We rejoice that a selection of one hundred standard hymns has already been made for this area. Each Church is free to add for its own use such additional hymns, creeds and forms of service as it may desire. For use at conferences and united meetings of Chinese and foreigners an edition of the one hundred standard hymns should be prepared, having Chinese and English versions in parallel columns.

4. Religious Instruction in Primary and Intermediate Schools.

In the primary and intermediate schools maintained by the Churches and Missions, in addition to the reading of the Bible and daily worship, we recommend that each Mission furnish such religious instruction as shall best embody its interpretation of the Christian life.

5. Union in Higher Education.

Inasmuch as the high schools or preparatory schools, and especially the colleges and universities, are located in centres occupied by Missions in common, and inasmuch as the cost of maintaining such institutions as are absolutely essential, if we are to help the Chinese set the standard of higher education for the nation, is beyond the reach of any single Mission, we recommend union in such work. Religious instruction should be continued in the Bible and in doctrines common to Christendom, each participating body being free to give further religious instruction in its hostels.

6. Union in Theological Instruction.

While the Conference recognizes that union in theological instruction must remain optional with the various Churches, it rejoices to note the fact that where such union has been tried, theological complications have not arisen thus far; and inasmuch as provision for theological instruction entails too heavy a burden upon any single Mission, we recommend union in such work.

7. Secretary of Education.

The Conference approves the action of the China Educational Association in appointing a Secretary of Education and recommends the hearty co-operation of the various Missions with him and with other superintendents of education.

8. Union Normal Schools.

As not only the courses of study in China but also the methods of study are being improved, we recommend the establishment of union normal schools in connection with the universities, of normal departments in connection with the colleges, and instruction in pedagogy for high school students, in order to prepare Chinese teachers to meet the present crisis.

9. Evangelical Character of Church-aided Education.

The Conference recommends that the trustees and managers of union colleges and universities take all necessary measures to maintain the strong evangelical character of all education given under Church auspices, in order that these schools may train leaders of strong Christian character.

10. Union Schools for Children of Missionaries.

We heartily endorse the idea of union schools for the education of the children of missionaries and recommend that these schools be supported and developed.

11. Co-operation in Medical Work.

Concerning co-operation in medical work we urge Missionary Societies to follow, so far as possible, the recommendations of the last two meetings of the China Medical Missionary Association.

12. Spiritual Hospitality.

We recommend that in the interests of spiritual hospitality the various Churches, so far as consistent with their conscientious convictions, admit to the privileges of fellowship the members of other Communion bringing proper certificates from the Churches of which they are members.

13. Church Discipline and Dismissed Agents.

In the discipline of members and in the dismissal of agents and employees upon moral grounds, the action of each Church should be recognized by the other Churches, and to this end notification of the same should be sent to all neighbouring Churches.

14. Assignment of Missionaries to Appropriate Tasks.

Believing that the time has come to consider our work as a unit, we recommend that missionaries be assigned to the work for which each is fitted and in which he can do the best service for the whole mission cause, irrespective of denominational affiliation.

15. National and Provincial Councils.

National and Provincial Councils with Chinese and foreign members should be organized or maintained where already organized.

16. A Common Name for all Churches.

We recommend that a common name be proposed for all the Churches uniting in National and Provincial Councils by the coming National Conference, this name to be adopted by the various participating Churches, so far as they may desire.

17. Reporting of Statistics in the Aggregate.

We suggest that the statistics of all Churches uniting in this federation be reported in the aggregate and that each branch be at liberty to use these common statistics, provided that at the same time it states the portion of the common work which that branch is doing, so that supporters may not be misled as to the amount of work done by any branch.

18. Organization for the Furtherance of Co-operation.

To promote co-operation in its various aspects as proposed above, we recommend:—

- (1) The organization of an Ad Interim Committee until a National Federation Council be organized, which should be done at the earliest practicable moment.
- (2) The organization of Provincial Councils wherever they are not already organized, with an executive committee for each, to carry out its suggestions.
- (3) The organization of District Councils with similar committees to carry out their purposes.
- (4) That through their secretaries the district conferences keep in touch with the executive committees of their province.
- (5) That each Provincial Committee keep in touch with the National Committee of China, and so far as it desires to do so, with the International Continuation Committee and with the Mission Boards of participating Missions.
- (6) That the national Ad Interim Committee keep in close touch with the Mission Boards and with the international Continuation Committee.
- (7) The appointment by each Provincial Council of an advisory committee which shall inaugurate measures for the full occupancy of each province as soon as possible.

19. Scientific Survey Proposed.

We further recommend that a scientific survey be made of this field, and to this end we request the China Inland Mission to grant Mr. Alexander Miller sufficient relief from other duties to enable him to complete a survey of the entire field upon the plan followed in his excellent survey of Chekiang.

20. Union Evangelistic Movement.

We recommend that all the Missions unite in an immediate and special effort to evangelize the whole of China.

21. National and International Relations of the Chinese Church.

Inasmuch as in other nations the majority of the Churches have nation-wide organizations, we sympathize with the Chinese who desire to organize a Chinese Church and recommend that such a Church become an integral part of the Federated Churches of China. But inasmuch as the teaching of the New Testament contemplates a universal Church of Christ as the goal of history, and inasmuch as most of the Churches now existing in China have international connections, we recommend that such Chinese as desire to do so be encouraged to maintain their international relations for the more speedy realization of the universal Church of Christ upon earth.

22. Services for United Confession and Prayer.

Finally, recognizing that deep and permanent union is and ever must be spiritual, we urge, above all, that constant prayer be offered by each Church in its public services for the prosperity of all other Churches; and that union services be held for the confession of the sin of division and for united prayer for the drawing together of all branches of the Christian Church in the bonds of truth and concord.

23. Co-operation in Business Methods.

We are thankful that the subject of co-operation in business methods has received the attention of a special committee of this Conference, and we recommend that means be found for preventing the waste that undoubtedly exists in business matters.

Tsinanfu Conference

1. Wide Observance of the Principle of Comity.

This Conference finds that the principle of comity is generally observed in the province of Shantung. We have division of territory; transference of Churches from one Mission to another where geographical conditions seem to make it advisable; transference of members by letter from one Church to another; and inquiries have been made with a view to securing more uniformity in the scale of salaries.

2. The Provincial Federation Council.

A Provincial Federation Council was formed in 1908 comprising six of the leading Missions at work in the province. Committees were appointed to further various forms of union work in Shantung. This Conference recommends:—

- (1) That the secretary call a meeting of the Council at the earliest possible date.
- (2) That the Council take steps at an early date to invite those Missions which are not yet incorporated in the Federation to join it.
- (3) That it make as soon as possible an accurate survey of missionary work now being done in the province.
- (4) That it appoint some one to act as statistical secretary who shall collect annually the statistics of work done by all the Missions in the province.
- (5) That it co-operate with similar organizations in other provinces.

3. National Federation Council.

This conference believes that a National Federation Council should be constituted at an early date and recommends that the National Conference shortly to be held in Shanghai should take such steps as it may find possible to expedite its organization.

4. Co-operation in Higher Education in Shantung.

There exists in the province of Shantung a considerable amount of co-operation in educational work. The Shantung Christian University in its arts and science department is a union of the American Presbyterian Mission, the English Baptist Mission and the Church of England Mission, while in the faculties of theology and medicine the two former Missions co-operate.

5. The Union University.

In view of the present opportunities for extending Christian education in China and the plans that are being made for the concentration of the different departments of the university in the city of Tsinanfu, the Conference strongly recommends that the different Missions at work in the province should unite with the Missions already forming this union in university educational work, and we would emphasize the fact that the present demand of the Chinese for higher education in all branches necessitates such a union scheme embracing more Mission Boards.

6. Union Normal Training Schools.

We recommend further that there be established in several centres throughout the province normal training schools on a union basis and affiliated with the University.

7. Increasing Administrative Responsibilities of the Chinese.

This Conference notes with satisfaction the action recently taken by one of the leading Missions in the province in enlisting the co-operation of the Chinese Church in the administration of the work of the Mission, including the control of funds received from abroad for evangelistic and educational work, and we recommend the extension of this principle of increasing the administrative responsibilities of the Chinese in all branches of mission work.

8. A Wider Union of Existing Churches.

This Conference calls attention to the fact that in Tsinanfu a Union Church comprising all the Christians of the city is already established, and in view of the prevailing desire among both Chinese and foreigners for a wider union of existing Churches, we recommend that the National Conference to be held in Shanghai give special attention to this most vital matter, and further recommend that the Continuation Committee should seek to secure the co-operation of the home Boards so as to facilitate this movement.

Peking Conference

1. The Present Situation.

A large measure of co-operation already exists and the discussions have clearly manifested a desire for deeper and further co-operation in mission work. The Conference was gladdened by the presentation of several instances which showed practical sympathy and friendly feeling on the part of missionaries of the Roman Catholic and Greek Churches.

2. National Committee.

A National Committee should be formed to be a link between the Continuation Committee at home and the missionary forces in the field. This Committee should not only transmit to the Continuation Committee a periodical survey of the whole field, but where advisable should make suggestions to the different Missions. Recommendations and reports of the National Committee should also in each case be sent to the Mission Boards.

3. Provincial Federation Councils.

A Federation Council or Co-operation Committee in each province should take into consideration all matters relating to effective co-operation of Missions or Churches in the province, and report to each body represented thereon, as well as to the National Committee.

4. Co-operation in Lesser Areas.

Where it may seem desirable a local representative committee should be appointed in each appropriate centre affiliated to the Provincial Committee, to consider local missionary activities and discuss questions relating to such matters as the following:—

- (1) Effective evangelization of that particular field.
- (2) Co-operation in the educational work of the district.
- (3) United meetings for prayer, including intercession for all bodies of Christians in that area.
- (4) United evangelistic effort.
- (5) When necessary or advisable, sundry matters relating to the scale of salaries, dismissed agents, disciplined members, transfer of members, etc.
- (6) Union in philanthropic work.

5. Questions for Provincial Council Consideration.

The following matters should be referred to the Provincial Committee:—

- (1) Statistics of all Christian work in the province.
- (2) Division of territory for the prevention of overlapping.
- (3) The establishment of Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations.
- (4) A comprehensive educational scheme for the province.
- (5) Union industrial schools.

- (6) Co-operation in social reform and especially in the anti-opium movement.
- (7) Forms of service for marriages, funerals, etc.

6. Board of Arbitration for All China.

A Board or Committee of Arbitration for all China should be formed, to which difficult questions of delimitation of mission areas may be referred by the Societies or Provincial Councils concerned.

7. The Uniting of Missions by Denominational Families.

Where different Missions of similar denominations are at work in China, they should endeavour to unite.

8. Wider Activity for Chinese of Spiritual Gifts.

It should be made possible for Chinese of spiritual gifts occasionally to be set free to visit the Church in other parts of China for the benefit both of the men themselves and of the places visited.

9. Confession and Intercession.

Since deep and permanent union is, and ever must be, spiritual, it is above all desirable that constant prayer be offered by each Church in its public services for the prosperity of all other Churches, and that union services be held for the confession of the sin of division, and united prayer for the union of Christendom.

Hankow Conference

1. The Central China Christian Educational Union.

Co-operation in education has already begun, for the Central China Christian Educational Union, which has been formed by the educational workers in various Missions in the four provinces of Hupeh, Hunan, Anhwei and Kiangsi, has already formulated courses and uniform examinations for the primary grades. We recommend that this Union be accepted by all the Missions of the three provinces of Hunan, Hupeh and Kiangsi as the recognized medium for the direction of school work, and that the Union be asked also to prepare as soon as possible courses of study and a system of examinations for the middle schools.

2. A Christian University at Wuhan.

This Conference is of opinion that the time has come when better provision should be made for university education by the Missions working this district, and would strongly recommend that steps be at once taken by the home Boards and the Missions on the field to amalgamate the existing higher educational forces towards the development of a Christian University in Wuhan.

3. A Union Theological College.

The Conference recommends that a union theological college of high standard be established in proximity to the proposed university and that as far as practicable it should work in connection with the Anglican and Lutheran Theological Colleges.

4. Union in Normal Training.

The Conference recommends that normal training for all grades of schools, both for boys and girls, be planned on a union basis.

5. A Union Medical School.

The Conference recommends that a union medical school at Hankow be developed on a strong basis, and that it be connected with any union Christian university founded at the Wuhan centre.

6. Central China Religious Tract Society.

The Central China Religious Tract Society has for many years been doing a great and growing work in the production of Christian literature. In the opinion of this Conference, this work should be still further extended. The Society might be utilized for the issue of periodicals and newspapers, and to make unnecessary the multiplication of mission presses. The Conference therefore recommends that the Missionary Societies interested in the work of the three provinces be asked to make such grants as will provide the salaries of one foreign and one Chinese editor for the Central China Religious Tract Society and also to enlarge its work.

7. Provincial Councils of the China Christian Federation.

Provincial Councils of the China Christian Federation, in which both missionaries and Chinese Christians have a part, having already been organized in the provinces of Hupeh and Hunan, in the opinion of this Conference such Councils may best serve to maintain close and helpful relations between the Christian forces in China and the Continuation Committee. The Conference recommends that the existing Councils should be urged to continue and strengthen their work, and recommends also that the Christian workers in Kiangsi form such a Council for that province; that these Councils be advised to meet not less frequently than once in three years to consult about matters concerning unity and comity as well as the occupation of the field, overlapping of territory, salaries of workers, superannuation of aged workers, re-employment of dismissed workers and questions of church discipline, such as divorce, concubinage and the observance of the Lord's Day.

8. Recommendations Looking Towards Organic Union.

As a further step, not only in co-operation but also towards more thorough unity, this Conference recommends that Missions of various bodies that do not differ radically in policy or doctrine should seek in some way to unite their Chinese members in one Church.

China National Conference

1. National Co-operation and Organization.

The Conference rejoices to find in the reports of the sectional conferences that a large amount of co-operation already exists. We also note an insistent demand for still larger co-operation, and especially for the adoption by the National Conference of measures for giving speedy effect to the findings of those conferences. Assuming the approval of the Mission Boards, we recommend the appointment by this Conference of a Continuation Committee to carry forward this work. We append to this report a tentative Constitution for such a Continuation Committee.

2. Uniting Chinese Constituencies of Churches of Similar Type.

As a further step, not only in co-operation, but also towards more thorough unity, this Conference recommends that where different Churches of similar denominational type are at work in China, they should endeavour to unite.

3. Larger Co-operation Needed at the Home Base.

Inasmuch as co-operation between the missionary bodies working on the field is rendered almost impossible without the sanction of the home Boards, this Conference recommends that the China Continuation Committee endeavour to bring about a greater measure of co-operation between the Mission Boards at home.

4. Union in Higher Education.

While each Mission should continue to maintain as many lower primary and higher primary schools as it needs and is able to support, we recommend that middle schools and colleges be conducted on union principles, making every endeavour to keep the standard of education as high as possible, and in conformity with government requirements, each participating Mission being free to give special religious instruction in its hostels.

5. Union in Theological Instruction.

While union in theological instruction must remain optional with the various Churches, we rejoice to note the fact that where such union has been tried, theological complications have not arisen thus far; and inasmuch as provision for higher theological instruction entails too heavy a burden upon any single Mission, we recommend union in such work.

6. United Summer Bible Schools.

We recommend that, wherever possible, united summer Bible schools be held in suitable centres for the Chinese church workers, both men and women.

7. Union in Medical Work.

Since it is essential to the highest interests of China that medical education should be carried on so far as possible under Christian auspices, and that this education should be maintained at as high a standard as possible, we heartily endorse the recommendation of the China Medical Missionary Association that Missions should unite in medical schools in connection with and on the same basis as union colleges.

8. Uniform Nomenclature in Literature.

We recommend that the various Publication Societies use uniform terms in the works they issue, and that the Christian bodies consider the great desirability of the adoption of uniform theological and ecclesiastical terms.

9. Standard Hymns and Uniform Hymn Translations.

We rejoice in the success of the efforts put forth to secure standard hymns and uniform translations of hymns for use in the various sections of China; and we suggest that the China Continuation Committee take such action as it finds advisable to extend the use and increase the number of such translations and especially to encourage the Chinese in the production of original hymns for the enrichment of Chinese hymnology.

10. Uniting Publishing Houses and Distributing Agencies.

While gratefully acknowledging the work accomplished by existing societies for the distribution of Christian literature, we recommend the uniting of our publishing houses and our distributing agencies so far as possible; and at each large centre we recommend the establishment of a single depot.

11. Spiritual Hospitality.

We recommend that so far as consistent with conscientious convictions, spiritual hospitality be offered to persons bringing proper certificates from the Churches of which they are members.

12. Recognition of Church Discipline.

In the discipline of members the action of each Church should be recognized by the other Churches, and to this end any Christian presenting himself for membership should not be received unless he have a certificate of good standing from the Church to which he belongs.

13. Employment of Dismissed Agents.

When an agent is dismissed for misconduct by a Christian organization, others desiring to employ him should not do so without consultation with that organization. Cases of dismissal because of incompatibility with an individual missionary, while also a natural subject for friendly consultation, are not here given the same emphasis.

14. Removal of Prejudice and Suspicion.

Whereas prejudice and suspicion arise from mutual ignorance, the missionaries of the various Societies and the Chinese Christians should cultivate friendly relations with members of the Roman Catholic and Greek Communions, with a view to breaking down such prejudices as now exist.

15. A Common Name for the Churches Desirable.

Inasmuch as a comprehensive name for all branches of the Christian Church in China is desirable, the China Continuation Committee is requested to consider the matter and suggest a name to the ecclesiastical authorities of the various Christian bodies working in China. [See under Chinese Church, paragraph 5.]

16. Statistics of the Co-operating Churches.

This Conference recommends that the statistics of all co-operating Churches be reported in the aggregate and that each co-operating Church be at liberty to use these common statistics, provided that at the same time it states the portion of the common work which that branch is doing, so that supporters may not be misled as to the amount of work done by any branch.

17. World Conference on Faith and Order.

We rejoice in the proposal to hold a World Conference on Faith and Order, we recommend the preliminary literature for wide perusal, and we ask earnest prayer for the blessing of God upon this important movement.

18. Confession and Intercession.

Finally, recognizing that our deepest union is and ever must be spiritual, we urge above all that constant prayer be offered by each Church for the prosperity of all other Churches; and that union services be held at convenient centres for the confession of sins against each other, arising from our divisions, and for united prayer for the drawing together of the various branches of the Church of Christ in the bonds of truth and concord.

Moukden Conference

This Conference recommends that steps be taken to consummate the formation of a Federal Council for Manchuria as soon as possible on the lines laid down by the China Centenary Conference; and that a committee consisting of Rev. C. Bolwig, Rev. J. Keers and Rev. G. Douglas, Messrs. Yen of Dairen, Wang of West Moukden, and Wang of Liaoyang be appointed to mature this matter.

Seoul Conference

1. General Recognition of Comity.

The principle of comity in territorial division has been well carried out in Korea and has produced excellent results.

2. Correlation of all Missionary Activities.

The Federal Council of Missions, the Educational Federation and the Korean Medical Missionary Association make, we believe, ample provision for proper correlation of all missionary activities, as far as the co-operating Missions are concerned.

3. Co-operation in Educational and Medical Work.

The exchange between Missions of teaching force, both Korean and foreign, for Bible classes and in local Bible institute work should be encouraged, and we recommend that in localities occupied by two or more mission stations, the educational work, and more particularly the medical work, be conducted co-operatively.

4. A General Advisory Committee for Korea.

We regard it as highly desirable that a general Advisory Committee should be appointed, to act on behalf of all Missions taking part in this Conference and of others who may wish to avail themselves of its services, the precise constitution and functions of this Committee being left for definition at a later meeting. [See "Field Advisory Committee for Korea" below.]

5. Union Committees at Principal Centres.

In such centres as Pyeng Yang, Seoul and Wonsan, where necessarily there is common work, we suggest that union committees be formed, to consult about the location of new Churches, so as to avoid confusion in evangelistic effort.

6. "Union" Numbers of Vernacular Periodicals.

We recommend that the existing periodicals in the vernacular arrange to issue a "union" number once a quarter, giving a summary of the work throughout the whole field and laying emphasis on what is necessary in the way of future developments.

Field Advisory Committee for Korea

NOTE.—At a special Conference of Missionaries held with Dr. Mott at Seoul, March 27, 1913, it was voted that the action as printed below be passed by the Conference, and that the temporary committee send this action to each Mission, asking it to appoint representatives, and to make suggestions on the Constitution; that these representatives meet, constitute the contemplated Advisory Committee, frame a Constitution based on the plan as here given, with modifications in accordance with the suggestions received from the Missions, and send the same to the Missions for their ratification as a permanent Constitution.

The Main Objects of a Field Advisory Committee are:—

- (1) To serve as a means of communication between the Christian forces of Korea, and the Continuation Committee of the Edinburgh Conference, and its special committees.
- (2) To render such other service on behalf of all the Christian forces in Korea as may be desired by the Christian bodies concerned.

The Composition of the Committee shall be as follows:—

- (1) There shall be one member from each of the following Missions (which may wish to participate) having twenty-five members or less, and one additional for each twenty-five members above the first twenty-five: Northern Presbyterian, Southern Presbyterian, Northern Methodist, Southern Methodist, Canadian Presbyterian, Australian Presbyterian and Anglican.
- (2) There shall be one each from the following auxiliary agencies and special Missions: British and Foreign Bible Society, American Bible Society, Korean Religious Tract Society, Young Men's Christian Association and the Salvation Army.
- (3) There shall be co-opted not more than ten members. In this co-option regard shall be paid to securing suitable representation to Koreans and to different departments of mission work.
- (4) Should any of the above mentioned regular or auxiliary missionary bodies be unable to unite officially in this arrangement, they may send representatives unofficially, and these representatives shall be entitled to participate in discussions and in committee work.

Tokyo Conference of Missionaries

1. Existent Comity and Co-operation.

This Conference would put on record its profound gratitude to God for the very large measure of Christian fellowship and of observance of the principles of comity and co-operation in the nation-wide work of the many Missions now operating in Japan. Investigation has shown that in this work there is little overlapping or even crowding. The Conference records its conviction that the most effective promotion of the Kingdom of God in Japan calls for wider application of the same principles.

2. Forms of Co-operative Endeavour Recommended.

We particularly recommend such forms of co-operative work as evangelistic campaigns; the production and distribution of Christian literature; still further co-operation, and, where practicable, union in theological and other education. We would respectfully urge the Boards and Societies to give large liberty to their Missions to enter into such co-operative forms of evangelistic, educational and other enterprises.

3. Special Enterprises of National Importance.

There is a growing demand for missionaries to devote themselves to special enterprises of importance to the Christian movement in Japan as a whole. One among other instances is the recent assignment by a Board in America of a missionary to the service of the Christian Literature Society. We would ask the supporting Boards and Societies at home to give favourable consideration to calls for such special workers when the proposals are approved by the Conference of Federated Missions and the Federation of Churches.

4. Value of Interdenominational District Conferences.

We would express our sense of the great value of the district conferences organized by the Committee on Distribution of Christian Forces.

5. Recommendations to the Conference of Federated Missions.

To the Conference of Federated Christian Missions we recommend:—

- (1) That it seek to secure such representation as may be possible from the bodies that do not now send regular delegates.
- (2) That it express itself as prepared to welcome relations with the Missions in Korea (Chosen) and Formosa (Taiwan.)
- (3) That steps be taken looking to closer relations with the Federation of Churches (Japanese).
- (4) That the Conference take steps to provide for the exchange of fraternal delegates between itself and the missionary bodies in China and India.

6. Continuation Committee of Japan.

In order to facilitate a close and mutually helpful relation between the Edinburgh Continuation Committee and the Churches and Missions of Japan, this Conference recommends the establishment of a special committee to be known as the Continuation Committee of Japan. It shall consist of twenty-four members, eight each appointed by the Federation of Churches and the Conference of Federated Missions, with eight additional members appointed by these sixteen in joint session, in order to secure a more complete representation of the entire Christian body in Japan. The members shall be elected for periods of four years, two members of each of the three groups to retire annually. This Continuation Committee of Japan shall be empowered, when invited to do so by the Edinburgh Continuation Committee, to appoint one or more persons (either members of the Committee or not) to attend meetings of the Edinburgh Continuation Committee as representatives from Japan.

7. Intercession for the Realization of Unity.

Finally, realizing that no practical co-operation can take the place of that unity of faith which can come only by the gift of God in answer to prayer, and by a desire and readiness on the part of all to learn the whole mystery of faith, not only as each body has received it but also as it has been given to others, we call upon all Christians in Japan to engage in united prayer for the realization of the unity for which our Lord Himself prayed.

Tokyo Conference of Japanese Leaders

1. Aspirations Towards Unity.

It is the sincere hope and earnest prayer of every Christian man and woman that all the Churches representing Christianity in Japan may come together and be made one in Christ, with one faith, one order and one work; but we think it will be some time before this high ideal can be realized.

2. A National Co-operative Committee Desirable.

It is desirable that a Committee be formed of representatives of the Federated Churches of Japan, the Federated Missions and all other Churches and Missions not related to these.

3. Constitution of the Committee.

Of the above committee, the present joint Conference of Japanese and foreign missionaries should choose fifteen Japanese and fifteen missionaries. This committee of thirty should then have power to increase its membership by the appointment of ten other persons from among the Japanese and foreign workers or Christian laymen.

4. Functions of the Committee.

The functions of this committee should be as follows:—

- (1) To investigate matters that concern the welfare of the whole Christian body, and to publish the results when deemed necessary.
- (2) To get into touch and communication with the Edinburgh Continuation Committee and with other similar organizations.

5. Union of Churches of Similar Faith and Order.

It is our desire that all those Churches of similar faith and order should be encouraged to effect a union among themselves as the first step to the larger unity of all Christian bodies.

Japan National Conference

1. Christian Fellowship and the Observance of Comity.

This Conference would put on record its profound gratitude to God for the very large measure of Christian fellowship and of observance of the principles of comity and co-operation on the part of Churches and Missions in Japan. The Conference records its conviction that the most effective promotion of the Kingdom of God in this land calls for wider application of these principles.

2. Co-operation in Education and in Other Fields of Endeavour.

We believe that especially in education and in the publishing and distribution of literature there is a large field for such co-operation. We also welcome the application of the same methods in evangelistic campaigns and in theological education, so far as is practicable, and we would respectfully urge the Boards and Societies to encourage their Missions to enter into these co-operative forms of work.

3. Continuation Committee of Japan.

We recommend the establishment of a special committee to be known as the Continuation Committee of Japan. This Committee shall consist of forty-five members, fifteen each appointed by the Federation of Churches and the Conference of Federated Missions, and in order to secure a more complete representation of the entire Christian body in Japan, these thirty shall appoint, or cause to be appointed, fifteen additional members. Members shall be appointed for periods of three years, five members from each of the three groups to retire annually. The functions of this Committee shall be:—

- (1) To serve as the organ of communication between the Edinburgh Continuation Committee and the ecclesiastical and missionary bodies in Japan.
- (2) To consider such matters as affect the welfare of the whole Christian body. This Committee shall, however, have no independent initiative or executive power, but shall undertake such work as may be referred to it by either of the Federations or by any other body of Christian workers.
- (3) To appoint, when invited to do so by the Edinburgh Continuation Committee, one or more persons (either members of the Continuation Committee of Japan or not) to attend meetings of the Edinburgh Committee as representatives from Japan.

4. Expediting the Establishment of the Committee.

In order to expedite the establishment of the Continuation Committee of Japan, the executive or standing committees of the two Federations are requested to appoint their respective representatives as soon as possible, each Federation designating the convener of its own group.

5. District Conferences.

We would express our appreciation of the great value of the district conferences organized by the Committee on Distribution of Christian Forces, and recommend their continuation.

6. Missionaries Serving as Specialists.

Because of the growing demand for missionaries to serve the whole Christian body as specialists, this Conference would ask the supporting Boards and Societies to respond favourably to calls for such workers when the enterprises concerned are endorsed by the Continuation Committee of Japan.

7. Uniting of Churches of Similar Faith and Order.

We urge Churches of similar faith and order, as far as practicable, to unite.

8. United Prayer for Unity.

It is the sincere hope and earnest prayer of this Conference that all the Churches representing Christianity in Japan may be brought together in fuller unity in Christ. Realizing that no practical co-operation can take the place of that unity of faith which can come only by the gift of God in answer to prayer, and through a real desire on the part of all to learn the whole mystery of faith, not only as each body has received it but also as it has been given to others, we call upon all Christians in Japan to engage in united prayer for the realization of the unity for which our Lord Himself prayed.

IX
MEDICAL WORK

IX. MEDICAL WORK

A notable defect in the Edinburgh World Missionary Conference of 1910 was its failure to provide a place on its programme for Medical Missions. With the exception of Colombo, Madras and Rangoon, all the Asiatic Conferences strongly emphasized this important work; though owing to the high state of efficiency of Japanese hospitals and to the excellent training of Japan's medical men, no mention of the subject appears in the Tokyo Conferences.

The Lahore delegates thus characterized the work: "Medical missions are an integral and essential part of the message of Christ to this land, and in some cases, as in the transfrontier unopened lands, are the most effective evangelistic agency at present available." In addition, the India National Conference mentioned their value as a powerful evangelistic agency, as an essential help in mass movements, as a forerunner of the Gospel and as an agency in Christian training. Malaysia favours them in pioneer work among Mohammedans,—especially among Moslem women,—in the Malay Peninsula, Sumatra, Java, and Brunei, and also as a weapon to counteract the power of witch-doctors among the Dyaks and other Borneo tribes.

Two statistical exhibits proved their necessity. Thus in India, where the British Government provides many hospitals, dispensaries and medical men, at least one hundred millions of people are still beyond the reach of even the simplest medical aid, according to careful estimates. The Shanghai Conference reported for its three provinces of Kiangsu, Chekiang and Anhwei, with a population of almost fifty millions, a foreign trained medical force of sixty-six physicians and seventeen trained nurses. Annually they minister to 380,000 patients through a total of 720,000 treatments in the dispensaries alone, besides the prolonged care of 30,000 patients who were in hospitals,—a wonderful record for a plant costing only $464,800 gold.

Many mission hospitals are so inadequately equipped and manned that recommendations looking toward their discontinuance through merging into other better equipped plants were passed. In more than one Conference it was stated that the minimum staff for the average hospital should be two physicians and one trained nurse, thus providing continuous service in furlough periods. It was also argued that to meet the advance of government plants and regulations in certain sections, medical mission plants and plans should be greatly improved.

Medical practitioners should be better prepared for their onerous labours. Eye surgery as well as general surgical preparation, and study in some school of tropical medicine, or a knowledge of tropical diseases, are mentioned as specialties to be mastered. It is also urged by some that the first year be spent in a station where a hospital and an experienced physician are found, thus enabling the new comer to study the vernacular as he could not do, if he were overwhelmed by his practice, and also to be aided in local diseases peculiar to that region. An experience in evangelistic work is of the utmost value for one who would make the most use of his influential calling.

The training of Asiatic assistants is often discussed. It ought to be done in a modern medical school with a staff of ten who give their full time to the work, which would mean with furloughs a total of fifteen fully qualified teachers, foreign and Asiatic. Medical works and journals in the vernaculars and in English are necessary to keep the graduates abreast of the latest advances in medicine. Women are needed in this profession, and they should be trained as carefully as their brothers in union women's medical colleges.

Tuberculosis and typhoid are foes to be especially fought through prevention, sanatoria, and inoculation. Instruction in sanitation and hygiene is advocated. Asylums for the insane, lepers, and incurables are an expansion of the programme, as are other non-medical philanthropies,—work for the blind, deaf and dumb, the aged and foundlings. To secure the needed funds and workers for this manifold enterprise, special medical secretaries and auxiliaries are advocated by some of the Conferences. All agree that the fundamental aim of a double cure must be provided for through prayer at home and consecrated physicians afield for whom to live is Christ and who, like Him, go about doing good.

1. Physical Needs of the People.

Government provision of medical relief in India reaches only a fraction of the people. It is estimated that about one hundred millions are either entirely without any such opportunities of relief, or, at most, receive inadequate relief through very poorly trained apothecaries or hospital assistants. It is evident, then, how enormous the physical needs of the people are, in spite of much provision by Government. Bodily relief is by no means the sole purpose of medical missions; but for this purpose alone the extension of such work is urgently needed in India.

2. A Minimum Hospital Staff.

Medical missions ought to be better manned and equipped. Every considerable hospital should be given at least two doctors and a trained nurse, in order that the heavy strains of such work may be better borne and that no interruption of continuity may occur from necessary furloughs.

3. Evangelistic Opportunities in Hospitals.

Believing that the large evangelistic field provided by the hospital in-patients and the numerous friends accompanying them cannot be sufficiently cultivated by the doctors alone, this Conference is of opinion that there should be a definite policy to attach an evangelistic missionary to every hospital, in order that religious impressions may be followed up and deepened by systematic personal work. Great success has attended such a plan in the few hospitals where it has been adopted.

4. Dispensary Work in Villages.

In the villages medical work with dispensaries is of great value, and is much needed. While it is hoped that Indian medical graduates will offer themselves in larger numbers for all branches of medical missions, it is necessary also to train Indian Christians for medical work in villages.

5. Protracted Christian Instruction in Hospitals.

Special attention should be directed to the fact, striking but often overlooked, that mission hospitals afford the sole and only means provided by the Church (except for women taught in zenanas) whereby men and women of middle and older life can receive daily instruction in the truths of Christianity for considerable periods lasting several weeks or months together. This is only one illustration of the special value of medical missionary work, which also exercises an important reflex influence on other forms of missionary activity.

6. Inter-Mission Co-operation.

Co-operation in medical work between several Missions in a given area is most desirable, and would often result in providing a much more adequate staff and more efficient work.

7. Special Training for Missionary Doctors.

Doctors coming to the field should be strongly advised to secure special training in eye diseases and surgery and also, whenever possible, to take a course of study in tropical diseases.

8. Language Study.

The Society or Board should insist that, at any cost and at any temporary inconvenience to the work, the doctor or nurse on reaching the field should get as full an opportunity for language study during the first two years as is given to the clerical missionary.

9. Inoculation for Enteric Fever.

In view of the large number of deaths from enteric fever and the still larger number of cases involving long periods of invalidism during recovery, all missionaries, both men and women, should be protected by prophylactic inoculation before their first coming to India, and advised to have this treatment repeated for at least the first three biennial periods after reaching India.

Jubbulpore Conference

1. Increase of Workers.

An increase to more than double the present number of medical missionaries is necessary so that the full effect and advantage of the medical agency upon the evangelization of the Mid-India area may be felt.

2. Staffing of Hospitals.

The time has come when it should be recognized as a principle of missionary activity that every mission hospital should have at least two medical missionaries upon its staff, in order that every doctor may be free for evangelistic work, and especially to follow up the opportunities created by his medical work, and that discontinuity of work consequent upon sickness and furloughs may be prevented.

3. Work Among Aborigines.

In view of the fact that there is almost no medical help among the aborigines, who are so responsive to the Gospel, there should be a medical missionary located in the midst of every 75,000 of such people.

4. Anti-typhoid Inoculation.

In view of the efficacy of anti-typhoid inoculation and the great interference with missionary work through the frequent occurrence of typhoid fever among missionaries, we urge all missionaries to make full use of this means of preserving health.

Allahabad Conference

1. Definite Policy Needed.

This Conference recommends that, in view of the extension of medical relief on the part of Government, there should be a more definite policy adopted for our medical missions in order to relate this work to general mission work and policy. This is made necessary by the great advance in women's work and by the mass movements.

2. Specific Recommendations.

In view of such developments we therefore recommend:—

- (1) An increase in the number of medical workers.
- (2) The modification of existing women's hospitals and medical institutions to bring about co-operation with, and to increase the efficiency of, zenana workers.
- (3) The better organizing of our medical work so as to co-ordinate it with the work of training village teachers and preachers, in order to bring medical mission work in closer touch with the mass movements.
- (4) That more medical mission work be attempted at large religious centres and melas (fairs).

Lahore Conference

1. Place of Medical Missions.

Medical missions are an integral and essential part of the message of Christ to this land, and in some cases, as in the trans-frontier unopened lands, are the most effective evangelistic agency at present available.

2. Mission Versus Government Medical Work.

While it is recognized that Government is doing excellent work in endeavouring to supply medical relief to both city and rural populations, the question as to whether such supply is adequate or not in any particular area cannot be regarded as the only determining factor in the establishing and maintaining of medical missions as a direct means of evangelization: the withdrawal or weakening of medical mission work, from whatever cause, cannot but weaken the effective appeal of the Gospel to the people of this land, both men and women.

3. Co-operation in Medical Instruction.

The co-operation of the various mission bodies is urgently required in the training of Indian Christian men and women for the higher grades of medical mission service, and attention is directed to the work and claims of the Women's Christian Medical College in Ludhiana, an interdenominational institution already founded in this Province to serve all Missions and appealing to all for support.

4. Opportunities for Christian Training.

A subsidiary but invaluable element in the work of medical missions is the part they play in the building up of the Indian Church by supplying a training ground of Christian character and service.

5. Instruction Regarding Health and Sanitation.

In view of the considerable, and apparently increasing, incidence of tuberculosis in the rising generation, especially of the school and college class, it is incumbent upon all Missions to give such instruction and practical training in their institutions regarding the laws of health, of personal and domestic hygiene, and of sanitation, as shall be of use not only to the Christian community but also, through it, to its non-Christian environment.

6. Protection Against Typhoid and Smallpox.

All missionaries coming to India should be protected against enteric fever by inoculation and against smallpox by revaccination.

Calcutta Conference

1. Large Scope for Medical Work.

This Conference finds that there is scope for much medical work by missionaries in this area in addition to the efforts of Government and of private practitioners which reach only a fraction of the population. Rural Bengal and Assam and Orissa, because of their many infected areas, and the prevalence of disease, form one of the most needy parts of the world for such work.

2. Effectiveness of Medical Missions.

Medical missions form a magnificent avenue of approach to the minds and hearts especially of the educated people who are above the age of attending school or college, and of the great mass of the people who are untouched by education at all. In the peculiar circumstances of the Hindu and Mohammedan peoples of this area, it has been found that medical missions to women are eminently effective.

3. Educating the People in Sanitation.

The medical missionary and his trained workers are able to be a very effective agency in educating the people in sanitation.

4. Indian Medical Evangelists.

This Conference recommends that more use be made of Indian medical evangelists in view of the large opportunities open to them. Such men are trained close to the medical missionary at his hospital from the age, say, of eighteen to twenty-one, work along with him, and thus secure his continuous personal influence at an age when young men are apt to drift out of sympathy with Christianity. After the age of twenty-one or twenty-two they receive a theological training, while still engaged in the active work of the medical mission. Similar plans might be followed with advantage in the case of women as dispensers or nurses.

India National Conference

1. Thankful Yet Apprehensive.

This Conference would express its thankfulness to God for all the blessing which He has vouchsafed upon the work of mission hospitals and dispensaries throughout India. It cannot, however, survey the present position with regard to this work without considerable apprehension.

2. Reconsideration of Aims Needed.

This Conference is of opinion that there is at present urgent need for a reconsideration on the part of many leaders at home of the true aims and scope of medical mission work, so that emphasis on its humanitarian aspect may not overshadow its value for direct evangelization.

3. An Essential Part of the Message of Christ.

This Conference is convinced that medical missions are an integral and essential part of the message of Christ to this land, and that in many cases, such as in large rural tracts and unopened fields, they represent the most effective evangelistic agency at present available.

4. A Powerful Evangelistic Agency.

For bringing the gospel message into vital contact with large numbers of people of all classes who from age and other circumstances are unreached by educational work, for reaching women in their secluded homes, and for extensive evangelization in the villages, especially in connection with mass movements, it has been established by experience that there is no agency more powerful than that of medical missions. This Conference would therefore commend this agency to those Missions which have not yet adopted it as a form of evangelistic work.

5. Of Essential Help in Mass Movements.

This agency, from the far-reaching and personal nature of its influence, may be of essential help, as an auxiliary to existing missionary activities, in the shepherding of the large numbers of Christians in village districts in connection with mass movements.

6. A Forerunner of the Gospel.

Medical missions constitute one of the best agencies for removing prejudice, for overcoming opposition and for opening closed doors.

7. An Agency of Christian Training.

As a subsidiary but invaluable element in the work of medical missions should be mentioned the part they play in providing a safe and suitable refuge for inquirers, where during periods of testing they may receive regular teaching while practising Christianity in daily work, and in providing a training ground in Christian character and service for numbers of young Christians, both men and women. This form of work also does large service by bringing vividly before the people the practical humanitarian aspect of Christianity.

8. Relation to Government Work.

This Conference gladly recognizes the excellent work which Government is doing in endeavouring to supply medical relief to both city and rural populations. Yet it should be remembered that, according to recent careful estimates, at least one hundred millions of the people of India are still beyond the reach of even the simplest medical aid. The question, moreover, as to whether such supply is adequate or not in any particular area cannot be regarded as the main determining factor in the establishing and maintaining of medical missions as a direct means of evangelization. The real problem is whether or not in that area a medical mission is the surest and speediest mode of bringing the message of salvation to the hearts of large numbers of the people.

9. Evangelistic Efficiency.

This Conference finds that, with a view to raising the evangelistic efficiency of medical missions to the highest possible level, it is most desirable:—

- (1) That in every well-established mission hospital there should be an evangelistic missionary, Indian or European, who can assist the medical staff to utilize to the fullest extent the opportunities afforded by the work in the hospital.
- (2) That every possible effort should be made to encourage the close mutual co-operation of the evangelistic and medical forces in each mission area, both in hospitals and in district itinerating work.

10. Need of Recruits.

This Conference views with the greatest concern the present falling-off in offers for medical mission service, which renders largely inoperative the oft-repeated and vital principle that, both for efficiency and for the permanence of the work, it is essential that at each considerable hospital there should be stationed two medical missionaries and one trained nurse. This shortage of medical missionaries is at present so serious that many mission hospitals stand empty for long or short periods owing to the absence on furlough or from sickness of the doctors in charge, while numberless pressing opportunities for extensive evangelization are being lost.

11. Women's Medical Missions.

With a view to ministering to the multitudes of women in India who are as yet beyond the reach of both medical relief and spiritual help, this Conference would earnestly press upon the home Church the need for strong reinforcements for women's medical missions. To this end every effort should be made both at home and in this country to bring the claims of this form of service before the attention of girl students.

12. Special Training for Medical Mission Recruits.

This Conference believes it to be necessary that the home authorities should enable all who are being prepared for medical mission work to acquire special training in ophthalmic and general surgery, and also in the treatment of diseases special to the tropics.

13. Inoculation for Enteric Fever.

This Conference is convinced that, in view of the heavy mortality among missionaries from enteric fever, and of the large number of cases involving long periods of convalescence with consequent serious interruption of work, it should be made a rule by Mission Boards that all new missionaries should be protected by inoculation before leaving home, while it is highly desirable that workers already in the field should be similarly protected.

14. Training of Indian Medical Workers.

This Conference finds that while the training of the junior assistants (dressers, compounders, etc.) in a mission hospital may, as a rule, be carried out in individual institutions, yet in the case of medical workers of higher grades, efficient professional equipment can best be given in union training institutions. Moreover, the training of all Indian medical mission workers of whatever grade should include systematic spiritual instruction, every effort being made to arouse in them the true evangelistic spirit, and later on to associate them closely with the medical missionary in the spiritual side of the work.

15. Tuberculosis.

This Conference finds that in view of the considerable, and apparently increasing, incidence of tuberculosis in the rising generation, especially of the school and college class, it is incumbent upon all Missions to give in their institutions such instruction and practical training regarding the laws of health, of personal and domestic hygiene and of sanitation, as shall be of use not only to the Christian community, but also through it to its non-Christian environment.

16. Isolation and Sanitoria.

The question of the isolation and efficient treatment of the numerous cases of tuberculosis among the younger generation of the Christian community (especially in mission schools and orphanages) is one which calls for earnest consideration on the part of responsible authorities in the field. In this connection the efforts now being made to establish tuberculosis sanitoria in various parts of India for the special treatment of members of the Indian Christian community deserve most grateful recognition. Such institutions, since they seek to benefit all classes of Indian Christians, have a strong claim upon the support of the various Missions.

17. Special Opportunities.

This Conference finds that the considerations mentioned in the above paragraphs on tuberculosis, as well as the importance of full co-operation on the part of Missions with the present great activity of the Government in all matters pertaining to public health, suggest that there is a magnificent sphere in Indian Missions for Christian medical men who possess expert knowledge on these and kindred subjects. The co-operation of such medical missionary experts as advisers in schools and colleges will afford valuable assistance to Christian educational work.

18. Correlation.

This Conference suggests that, with a view to the due correlation of medical missions with other forms of missionary activity, the Medical Missionary Association of India, established six years ago, and possessing a membership of over 250 qualified workers, might be brought into organic relation with the National Missionary Council in such a way as that body may think fit, and that the provincial sections of the same Association might be related to the Provincial Representative Councils.

19. Appeal.

Finally, this Conference would earnestly plead for the prayers and sustained efforts of God's people at home, that the necessary workers and supplies may be forthcoming to enable this branch of missionary work to go forward with renewed vigour, and to take full advantage of the numerous opportunities now presented in various parts of the country.

Rangoon Conference

(Not Discussed)

Singapore Conference

1. Evangelistic Efficiency.

Experience seems to this Conference to show that there is a real danger in many cases that the spiritual side of medical missions may become cramped by the pressure of the purely medical side of the work. This Conference, therefore deems it expedient that evangelistic workers be attached to the mission staff, who should follow up the religious work done in the hospital.

2. Self-support.

In the interest of the people themselves, as well as for the augmentation of available funds, the Conference thinks it desirable that medical missions should be self-supporting as far as possible, and recommends that patients be required, according to their means, to contribute towards the cost of drugs and medical comforts supplied to them.

3. Special Opportunities.

The Conference finds that the area under consideration offers peculiar opportunities for medical mission work, the call for which is specially urgent at the present time. The most pressing of these needs, among several that were brought forward, are:—

- (1) As pioneer work among Mohammedans in the Malay Peninsula, Sumatra (Achin and Padang in Western Sumatra), Java and Brunei.
- (2) More particularly to reach Mohammedan women.
- (3) To counteract the power of the witch-doctors among the Dyaks and other tribes of Borneo.
- (4) To reach the Chinese and Indian women in our large cities.

4. Recruits and Training.

The Conference views with great concern the paucity of offers for medical mission service, and recommends:—

- (1) That the profession be more adequately represented on Boards of Missions.
- (2) That the claims of the foreign field be pressed upon students during their hospital career by leaders of the student Christian organizations (themselves preferably medical).
- (3) That more be done by educational missionaries in keeping this object before promising Asiatic Christian pupils.
- (4) That Christian hostels be formed in connection with the medical schools of Singapore, Batavia and Sourabaya.

Canton Conference

1. Efficiency before Extension.

We are thankful to God for the part that medical evangelism has had, and still has, in the missionary propaganda, and that the future is still so full of promise for even greater service and profit to the Kingdom. Formerly medical missions were considered chiefly a wedge for opening up ways for larger and more aggressive work, but they have become an important part of the Church's activity. Hence we must aim at nothing less than the highest possible efficiency in every phase of this work. The growing knowledge of all Western sciences demands that if we are to retain our positions as leaders in Christian medical and surgical work our aim must be efficiency before extension.

2. Union Medical Schools and Training Schools for Nurses.

Thoroughly equipped and efficient Christian medical schools are a pressing need in Canton and Foochow. These schools should be on a basis of union between Missions and of co-operation with the Chinese. The home authorities are strongly urged to supply workers and funds for this object. Moreover, seeing there is an increasing demand among the Chinese for nurses, training schools for these should be opened in the large centres where they do not already exist.

3. Equipment of Hospitals.

The home authorities should not rest satisfied till every hospital on the field is thoroughly equipped.

4. Union in Mission Hospital Work.

The principle of union not only should be applied to medical education but also should be extended to the working of mission hospitals where possible and advisable, thus combining economy and efficiency.

5. Following up Hospital Evangelistic Work.

We note with concern that there is often a failure to follow up and encourage patients who have been spiritually awakened while in hospital. There should be close co-operation between pastoral and medical workers in every district, and wherever possible patients on their return home should be put into touch with Chinese or foreign workers.

6. The Insane, the Lepers and the Blind.

Work among the insane, the lepers and the blind should be encouraged and undertaken wherever possible.

7. Health of Pupils.

Because of the prevalence of tuberculosis and other contagious and zymotic diseases, every school should have a medical supervisor with full authority.

8. Need of Recruits.

We view with concern the present falling off in offers for medical mission service, which renders largely inoperative the oft-repeated and vital principle that for efficiency and permanence it is essential that at each hospital there should be at least two medical missionaries and a trained nurse. This shortage of medical missionaries is at present so serious that many a mission hospital stands empty during the furlough or sickness of the doctors in charge, while numberless pressing opportunities for extensive evangelization are being lost.

9. Special Training.

It is necessary that the home authorities should enable all who are being prepared for medical mission work to acquire special training in general and ophthalmic surgery, and also in tropical diseases. Moreover, time and grants-in-aid for post-graduate study should be given to all medical workers on furlough.

10. The First Year of Active Work.

Wherever possible medical missionaries should spend at least the first year of active work at a station where there is a senior medical man with an established hospital.

11. Sanatoria for Missionaries.

We recommend the provision of sanatoria in connection with every centre not yet so supplied. This plan has proved itself to be the truest economy in conserving the health and usefulness of missionaries. Co-operation in this matter is urged.

Shanghai Conference

1. Medical Missions as an Evangelistic Agency.

Medical missions are an integral, co-ordinate and permanent part of missionary work.

- (1) Doctors and nurses should have had experience in evangelistic work before coming to the field.
- (2) The best and most spiritual Chinese young men and young women should be encouraged to enter our medical schools in view of becoming leaders in their profession.

2. Medical Occupation of the Field.

Statistics for the Provinces of Kiangsu, Chekiang and Anhwei: Twenty-seven important cities with medical work; 40 hospitals, 24 of which have only one doctor each; 30,000 hospital in-patients annually; 60 dispensaries; 350,000 patients treated in dispensaries annually; 720,000 treatments given annually in dispensaries; 66 foreign-trained physicians; 17 foreign-trained nurses; 304 Chinese assistants and nurses; 74 Chinese hospital evangelists; $320,000 (Mex.) spent annually for hospital maintenance; $245,000 (Mex.) (77%) raised on field toward support; $75,000 (Mex.)

(23%) contributed by Missionary Societies; $929,600 (Mex.) value of hospitals and other medical plants.

3. Unoccupied Territory.

Most destitute of hospitals are Southern Anhwei and Western Chekiang, where six hundred square miles of a densely populated area are without any medical missions.

4. Distribution and Correlation of Medical Forces.

Large or isolated hospitals should have at least two missionary physicians. Smaller and accessible localities should have one missionary physician and one or more well-trained Chinese assistants. No new medical work should be opened where hospitals already exist. No new medical work should be opened in proximity to a centre already provided with missionary hospitals. Where two inefficiently equipped hospitals exist near each other, the two should be encouraged to unite and make one strong institution. Physicians with the necessary qualifications should, whenever possible, be released for medical educational work. All important policies, changes in policy or the opening of new medical work should be submitted to the China Medical Missionary Association, through its Executive, for approval.

5. Christian Medical Education.

The greatest need at present is to develop Chinese Christian leadership in the medical profession and to provide fully qualified Chinese physicians, nurses and maternity nurses. Apart from the Union Medical School at Nanking, with which, as a clinical department, the Medical College at Hangchow is affiliated, no new medical educational work should be undertaken in this section by missionary organizations.

6. Co-operation with the Chinese in Medical Work.

Co-operation with the Chinese in medical schools and hospitals should be effected wherever possible by having these institutions gradually and increasingly staffed, supported and controlled by the Chinese. We should encourage and help the Chinese in establishing institutions for the care of the insane, the blind, the incurables, and also sanatoria for tuberculosis and leprosy. To retain the best Chinese physicians for medical missionary work, larger salaries must be provided than have usually been given.

7. Medical Literature.

Medical text-books, journals and other literature in Chinese are indispensable and the supply at present is very inadequate. Hence we urge that a suitable man be set apart for literary work in connection with the China Medical Missionary Association.

8. General Policy of Medical Missions.

We endorse the resolutions embodying the policies of medical expansion, education and co-operation adopted at the triennial meeting of the China Medical Missionary Association (January, 1913), and at the request of that meeting transmit these resolutions through this Conference to the Continuation Committee.

NOTE.—For the resolutions here referred to, see under Medical Missions, China National Conference findings.

Tsinanfu Conference

1. Place of Medical Missions.

Medical missions are to be regarded not simply as an expedient for opening the way for, and extending the influence of, the Gospel, but as an integral, co-ordinate and permanent part of the missionary work of the Christian Church, and as continuing the work of our Lord in the double capacity of healer and teacher.

2. Raising Standards of Medical Work.

The rapidly changing conditions in China, as well as the rapid advance in medicine and surgery at home, are calling loudly for better medical work, increased facilities, larger force and a necessarily larger expenditure of money. The Church and Boards at home and the missionary body on the field should therefore expect a higher grade of medical work from their medical missionaries, and they should make provision for the increased number of physicians and foreign trained nurses required and for the increased cost of hospital maintenance involved.

3. Fully Qualified Nurses Needed.

Medical work in our hospitals can never be satisfactory until we have thoroughly trained nurses. Therefore a fully qualified trained nurse should be associated with each large hospital, wherever possible.

4. Training Chinese as Physicians and Nurses.

A most important feature of the work of medical missions in China, at the present juncture, is the work of training Christian young men and women, that they may take their places as thoroughly qualified Christian physicians and nurses to perpetuate the work already begun, and to occupy positions of influence in the service of their country.

5. Strengthening the Union Medical College in Tsinanfu.

In order to accomplish the object contemplated in paragraph 4, we approve of strengthening the Union Medical College in Tsinanfu until it meets the requirements set by the China Medical Missionary Association, namely, to have at least ten professors, foreign or Chinese, giving full time to the work of the college.

6. Government Registration.

We are desirous of securing government registration, and to bring our teaching work into line with the regulations of the Ministry of Education, so that a strong and thoroughly equipped medical profession may be established in this great land.

7. Larger Salaries for Medical Graduates.

In order to retain in medical missionary service the best graduates from our medical colleges, we wish to point out that it will be necessary to give much larger salaries than have usually been given.

8. A Medical Secretary for Each Large Mission Board.

We would suggest the advisability of including on the secretarial staff of each of the larger Mission Boards a medical secretary, who shall study the problems of medical missions, and present their needs at home.

9. Chinese Financial Support of Hospitals and Dispensaries.

We recommend that in so far as possible the hospitals and dispensaries in connection with our Missions should be supported by the Chinese, either through voluntary contributions or by a system of charges, as may be determined by those in control of such institutions.

10. Better Equipment for Women's Medical Work.

In view of the fact that there is but one woman physician in active work for every five millions of the population in Shantung, and in view of the fact that Chinese girls are asking for a medical education, we therefore urge that the Boards at home make some adequate provision for the better equipment of woman's medical work in Shantung, with a view to the training of Chinese women as physicians and nurses.

Peking Conference

1. The Church of China and the Ministry of Healing.

Medical missions have been carried on in the past almost entirely by foreign organizations, and have had too little vital union with the Chinese Churches. The time has come when the Christian Church of China should be increasingly encouraged to realize her responsibility in carrying on this ministry of healing. This work should be developed within the Church as a part of her activities, and her members should share in it, both practically and financially. Only by cultivating this intimate co-operation between our medical missions and the Church in China, can the best use be made of our work, its permanency be ensured and its fruits be gathered in.

2. Survey of Medical Mission Work.

No proper survey of medical mission work in North China at present exists. To facilitate the adequate occupation of the field, and to prevent overlapping, such a survey is urgently needed. We recommend that the National Conference to be held in Shanghai under the auspices of the Continuation Committee, take steps to prepare this survey of all China, in consultation with the Executive of the China Medical Missionary Association, and submit it to the Continuation Committee, the home Boards and the governing bodies on the field.

3. Comity, Co-operation and Arbitration.

There are several instances of hospitals of different Missions being planted in close proximity to each other, giving an appearance of rivalry, which is detrimental to the highest good of our work and antagonistic to the principles of union. We therefore suggest:—

- (1) That no new medical work be started without consultation and agreement with the Missions carrying on medical work in that field.
- (2) That where two hospitals now exist in proximity to each other, they should either unite or be devoted to different branches of medical or surgical work.
- (3) That a Board or Committee of Arbitration for all China be formed, to which difficult questions of delimitation of mission areas for medical work may be referred by the Societies or Provincial Councils concerned. We suggest that such a Committee be appointed at the National Continuation Committee Conference in Shanghai.
- (4) We wish to record our hearty approval of the resolutions presented by the Medical Missionary Association of China for the consideration of the Edinburgh Continuation Committee. [See under Medical Missions, China National Conference.]

Hankow Conference

I. A Union Medical College in the Wuhan Centre.

The most urgent feature of medical missions in China at the present time is that of training young men and young women that they may become fully qualified Chinese physicians and surgeons to their fellow countrymen. This Conference urges the Missions at work in the provinces of Hupeh, Hunan and Kiangsi to unite in the formation of a strong union medical college in the Wuhan centre which shall be efficiently staffed, equipped and financed. It is necessary that sufficient clinical opportunity and suitable equipment be provided for the students of the union medical college [see paragraph 10, of the China Medical Missionary Association Resolutions, in connection with Medical Work, China National Conference findings] and the Missions in the Wuhan centre should in some way co-operate in hospital work so as to attain this end, as the need cannot be met by any single Mission. It was also considered at the Medical Conference in Peking that a total staff of at least fifteen fully qualified teachers is needed for each medical college. This Conference accordingly presses upon the home Boards and medical schools the urgent need of specially qualified women and men being sent out for this purpose.

2. A Union Medical College for Women.

There is an ever-increasing need for qualified Chinese women doctors to relieve the sufferings of their sisters, and inasmuch as there is no medical school for the training of such in Central China, this Conference deems it desirable that a union medical school for women be established in Wuhan, to be supported by the Missions engaged in work in the district represented by this Conference.

3. Translation of Medical Literature.

The need is urgent for many standard Western medical textbooks and other medical literature in Chinese for the use of doctors, students and nurses, and we request the home Societies and the governing bodies on the field to allow men and women with the necessary qualifications to be set free for this translation work.

4. Special Philanthropic Institutions.

The spirit of Christ has been manifest, suffering has been relieved, and the active sympathy of the Chinese Church has been stimulated by such philanthropies as asylums for lepers and for the insane; homes for incurables, for the aged and for foundlings and orphans; schools for the deaf, dumb and blind; and refuges for slaves. We believe that one or more institutions for carrying on these forms of philanthropic work should be undertaken in these provinces, and each Society should enter into the work of some one or other of these institutions.

5. Special Medical Secretaries for Mission Boards.

It detracts from the usefulness of the medical missionary if he is hampered by the responsibility for finding the means of support for his work by engaging in private practice or otherwise, and we urge upon the Mission Boards the advisability of forming Medical Auxiliaries to work in connection with their Home Departments, with fully qualified medical men as secretaries, who shall give the necessary information to the public, and solicit funds and otherwise forward the interests of the work, so that mission hospitals shall be more adequately financed than has been the case hitherto.

6. Hospital Sunday.

We recommend that throughout the Christian Church in China, a hospital Sunday be instituted, when the claims of hospital and philanthropic work shall be advocated, when the methods found useful in the West shall be employed to enlist the co-operation of the Christian congregations of China, and when an offering shall be taken for such work.

China National Conference

1. Policy of Medical Mission Work.

The recommendations of the China Medical Missionary Association are received by this Conference with much satisfaction, in so far as a definite policy in medical mission work has been framed. Medical missions are to be regarded not merely as a temporary expedient for opening the way for, and for extending the influence of, the Gospel, but as an integral, co-ordinate and permanent part of the missionary work of the Christian Church, as was emphasized in the resolutions passed by the Shanghai Conference of 1907, thus manifesting to the Chinese the natural fruits of our religion.

2. Medical Education.

It is necessary at the present time to put Christian medical education in the forefront of medical mission work in China in order:—

- (1) To give Christ His real place as the Master Worker in all healing.
- (2) To ensure the continuity and permanence of the work.
- (3) To develop it concurrently with other parts of church work.
- (4) To prevent the medical profession of China from falling chiefly into antichristian and non-Christian hands.

3. Educational Standard.

All medical educational work must be of a high standard if those whom we train are to be worthy to serve and represent their Master. Therefore:—

- (1) Christian medical colleges in China should not be multiplied beyond the powers of the Missionary Societies, in conjunction with the Chinese, to staff and support them adequately. Those already existing and approved by the China Medical Missionary Association's resolutions, namely, Moukden, Peking, Tsinanfu, Chengtu, Hankow, Nanking, Hangchow, Foochow and Canton, should be brought up to the required standard before any others are added.
- (2) Every Missionary Society should, if possible, unite in the working of the medical colleges serving the areas in which it labours, so as to provide them with thorough equipment and adequate staffs.

4. Concentration of Effort.

Owing to the urgency of the need for medical education, there should be special temporary concentration of effort towards the staffing and equipment of colleges and hospitals in the above-mentioned centres. This should take precedence of new medical work. The distribution of medical missionaries should be considered by the Missionary Societies, on the lines recommended by the China Medical Missionary Association's resolutions, paragraphs 5 and 6, so as to secure that primary attention shall be given to the most important work, and that those best fitted for teaching and for specializing in large hospitals shall be placed in the centres.

5. Co-operation with the Chinese.

Co-operation with the Chinese in medical schools and hospitals should be effected, wherever possible, by having these institutions gradually and increasingly staffed, supported and controlled by the Chinese. Moreover, we should encourage and help the Chinese in establishing institutions for the care of the insane, the blind, the incurable, and also sanatoria for tuberculosis and leprosy patients. To retain the best Chinese physicians for this work, larger salaries must be provided than have usually been given.

6. Government Regulations.

In order to secure the permanence and practical utilization of our Christian medical colleges, and to make it possible for our graduates to be officially recognized as fully qualified medical men who can occupy positions of influence and usefulness in the service of their country, it will be necessary to bring these colleges into line with the rules and regulations of the Ministry of Education and thus make them a part of the educational system of China.

7. Vital Relation to the Chinese Church.

Medical missions in the past have been carried on almost entirely as foreign organizations and have had too little vital union with the Chinese Church. The time has come when the Christian Church of China should be increasingly encouraged to realize her responsibility in carrying on and supporting this ministry of healing. This work should be developed within the Church, as a part of her activities, and her members should share in it both practically and financially, and the students should be encouraged to enter our colleges and take up medical missions as their life-work.

8. Occupation of the Field.

The area of China being so large and the wide extension of medical mission work of so great importance, a definite policy should be followed with regard to the position of hospitals supported by mission funds. No new hospitals should under any circumstances be placed in a district near which medical mission work is already carried on. When two hospitals exist in close proximity they should unite, or be devoted to different branches of medical or surgical work.

9. Survey of the Field.

We regret that no proper survey of medical mission work and of the unoccupied fields in China is in existence. We therefore recommend this Conference to request the Executive of the China Medical Missionary Association to prepare such a survey with a view to the adequate occupation of the field by medical workers and to prevent overlapping.

10. Work Among Women and Children.

Among the most pressing needs of medical missions is the further development of work among women and children. We therefore recommend that such work be extended to as many centres as possible.

11. Text-books and Other Medical Literature.

Co-existent with the great need for medical education is the necessity for standard medical text-books and other medical literature in Chinese for the use of medical students, hospital assistants and medical graduates. The Conference would urge on the Missionary Societies the need for setting apart suitable men to work in connection with the China Medical Missionary Association in translating and preparing such books. They also urge the necessity for money grants towards this end.

12. Training of Chinese Nurses.

As the nursing in our hospitals cannot be done satisfactorily until we have thoroughly trained nurses, we strongly recommend that a competent foreign nurse be associated with each large hospital who can undertake the training and superintendence of Chinese nurses. This we consider indispensable in those hospitals which are associated with the work of medical colleges.

13. Evangelistic Work of the Medical Missionary.

In view of the great influence of the physician on his patients, we recommend that the hospital evangelistic agents should be under his direction, and that he should personally superintend and take active part in the religious work of the hospital. Further, we note with concern that there is often a failure to follow up and encourage patients who have been spiritually awakened while in the hospital. There should be close co-operation between pastoral and medical workers in every district, and, wherever possible, patients on their return home should be put in touch with Chinese or foreign workers.

14. Preparation of the Medical Missionary.

Medical missionaries are sent forth as messengers of the Church and as ambassadors of Christ. The recognition of this should add to their influence and usefulness. We recommend that all medical missionaries should receive their commissions from the home Churches in a public and unmistakable way, and should be solemnly set apart as missionaries of the Church.

- (1) The primary aim of the medical missionary being to make known God's saving grace to men, we emphasize the importance of his home training and experience in evangelistic work.
- (2) It is of the highest importance that the medical missionary should have a good working knowledge of the Chinese language, spoken and written. We therefore strongly urge the advisability of relieving him of all responsible medical work during his first two years in the country, and of requiring him to pass examinations not less searching than, if on different lines from, those of his clerical colleagues.
- (3) We recommend that all medical missionaries should pursue a course in tropical medicine before coming to the field, also that opportunity be given them to attend hospital practice when at home on furlough.

15. Medical Auxiliaries at the Home Base.

We urge upon the Mission Boards the advisability of forming Medical Auxiliaries to work in connection with their Home Departments, and of having as secretaries of these auxiliaries fully qualified medical men who shall have necessary information regarding the needs on the field, shall solicit funds, and otherwise shall forward the interest of the work, so that mission hospitals and medical colleges shall be more adequately financed than has been the case hitherto.

16. Appeal for Prayer and Workers.

This Conference desires to record its thankfulness to Almighty God for the abundant blessings vouchsafed upon medical missionary work throughout China, and it asks the prayers of God's people that this work may be continued and extended, and that more fully qualified and consecrated men and women both from China and from the home lands may be sent forth to meet the need of the vast areas that are still unoccupied.

Recommendations of the Medical Missionary Association of China

(Adopted at the triennial meeting of the Association, Peking, January 13 to 17, 1913.)

The Medical Missionary Association of China calls the attention of Dr. Mott, as representing the Continuation Committee, and also of home Missionary Societies, to the following facts and suggestions:—

1. Medical Missions are not to be regarded as a temporary expedient for opening the way for, and extending the influence of the Gospel, but as an integral, co-ordinate and permanent part of the missionary work of the Christian Church, as was emphasized in the resolutions passed by the Shanghai Conference of 1907.

2. There are now in China over 500 medical missionaries, but there is a lack of common policy among the Missionary Societies in the utilization and distribution of these forces. The Association would, however, deprecate any independent decision on the part of the Missionary Societies as to policy in medical missionary work without consultation with this Association through its Executive.

3. A most important feature of the work of medical missions in China at the present juncture is the work of training Christian young men and women that they may take their place as thoroughly qualified medical missionaries to perpetuate the work we have begun, and to occupy positions of influence in the service of their country.

4. The Association therefore considers that the object of our presence here can now best be advanced by concentrating our energies largely on the important centres approved by the Association, and forming there efficient union medical colleges and specially equipped hospitals. And we would strongly recommend that all such colleges be affiliated and co-ordinated with other existing missionary educational institutions.

5. The Association reiterates its Resolution of 1907 as to the desirability of each hospital being in charge of two fully qualified medical missionaries, but considers that, owing to the present emergency, and the urgency for medical education, all except large or isolated hospitals should be put in charge of one foreign doctor, with, if possible, one or more fully qualified Chinese.

6. The Association recommends that much of the work done in the less important stations should, wherever practicable, be placed under the charge of qualified Chinese; that missionaries of ability and experience in certain instances should be called in from these stations to the teaching centres to take part in the work of the colleges and large hospitals; and that the staffing and thorough equipment of these centres should take precedence of the opening up of new medical work throughout the country.

7. A number of fully qualified men and women are scattered over large areas without proper hospitals or equipment, and this, in the opinion of the Association, is waste of effort and money, as no efficient medical missionary work can be done on these lines. We have arrived at a stage in China when all medical and surgical work done in the name of Christianity should be of the highest order, and we therefore recommend, in the interests of economy and efficiency, that wherever possible small and poorly equipped hospitals should unite to form thoroughly equipped institutions.

8. Recent movements in China have developed a natural desire on the part of the people to carry out their own educational reform, and this we must recognize, and make the foreign element in our work as little prominent as possible by having our Colleges gradually and increasingly staffed and supported by the Chinese themselves.

9. The Association considers that the minimum staff for efficient work in a medical college should be ten men on the field giving full time. This means, when furloughs, language study, etc., are taken into account, a total staff of at least fifteen fully qualified teachers, foreign or Chinese.

10. The Association recommends that sufficient lecture room and laboratory accommodation should be provided, and as liberal an equipment as possible in microscopes, models, pathological specimens, etc., also that clinical opportunities to the extent of three beds to each student in the two final years be considered the minimum.

11. The Association strongly recommends that until the undermentioned union medical colleges are efficiently staffed and equipped no new medical colleges be started in China. The schools referred to, beginning with the North, are:—Moukden, Peking, Tsinanfu, Chengtu, Hankow, Nanking, Hangchow, Foochow and Canton.

12. In order to retain in medical missionary service the best graduates from our medical colleges we wish to point out that it will be necessary to give much larger salaries than have usually been given.

13. As medical books in Chinese are necessary in order to carry on the instruction in our colleges and to provide medical literature for graduates, the Association would urge on the Missionary Societies the need for arranging that suitable men should devote a large part of their time to the work of translating and preparing such books, and also the necessity for money grants for this purpose.

14. The Association is of opinion that the nursing in our hospitals can never be satisfactory until we have thoroughly trained nurses; that a foreign trained nurse should be associated with each large hospital wherever possible, and that this should be considered indispensable in those hospitals which are associated with the work of medical colleges.

15. The following resolution was passed by the Association: Resolved,—That we, the members of the China Medical Missionary Association, met in Conference, let it be known:—

- (1) That in establishing medical colleges and hospitals our sole object is to bring the blessings of healing to the souls and bodies of the people of China, and to give a thorough training in medicine and surgery to young men and women of education and intelligence, enabling them as fully qualified doctors to be of the highest service to their country.
- (2) That we have no desire to create permanently foreign institutions, and that our aim and hope is that these medical colleges will gradually and ultimately be staffed, financed and controlled by the Chinese themselves.

- (3) That we are desirous of bringing our teaching work into line with the regulations of the Ministry of Education, and in all ways to co-operate with and assist the Government of the Republic in medical education, so that a strong and thoroughly equipped medical profession may be established in this great land.

16. In conclusion, the members of the China Medical Missionary Association take advantage of this, their first opportunity to express their profound disappointment that medical missions, which have been so largely blessed of God as a missionary agency, were ignored in the list of subjects for consideration at the Edinburgh Conference of 1910; and they strongly urge that medical missions be adequately represented in any future conference.

17. We recommend that two local representatives be appointed to bring forward these recommendations at the various centres where conferences with Dr. Mott are held. These members shall be chosen from those who have attended the Medical Missionary Conference at Peking. Also that a committee of five be appointed to represent the Peking Medical Conference at the General Conference with Dr. Mott at Shanghai; and that copies of these resolutions be sent to the Continuation Committee, and to all home Mission Boards and Committees and governing bodies on the field.

Moukden Conference

1. Putting Medical Education to the Fore.

It is necessary at the present time to put Christian medical education in the forefront of medical mission work in China, in order:—

- (1) To ensure the continuity and permanence of the work.
- (2) To develop it concurrently with other parts of church work.
- (3) To prevent the medical profession of China from falling chiefly into antichristian or non-Christian hands.
- (4) To give Christ His real place as the Master-worker in all healing.

2. Medical Work as a Function of the Chinese Church.

Medical missions have in the past been carried on almost entirely as foreign organizations and have had too little vital union with the Chinese Churches. The time has come when the Christian Church of China should be increasingly encouraged to realize her responsibility in carrying on and supporting this ministry of healing. This work should be developed within the Church, as a part of her activities, and her members should share in it both practically and financially, and students should be encouraged to enter our colleges and take up medical missions as their life-work.

3. Co-operation Between Hospital and Other Workers.

We note with concern that there is often failure to follow up and encourage patients who have been spiritually awakened while in the hospital. There should be close co-operation between hospital and other workers in every district, and wherever possible, patients on their return home should be put into touch with Chinese or foreign workers.

Seoul Conference

1. Place of Medical Work.

Medical work is an essential part of the Gospel.

2. Staffing of Hospitals.

Every existing hospital should have two doctors, either Korean or foreign, on its staff, and due weight should be given to this consideration in entertaining proposals for opening new hospitals. Every hospital should have also at least one foreign nurse.

3. The Union Medical School at Seoul.

All Missions should unite in giving adequate support to the Union Medical School at the Severance Hospital, both by setting doctors free for reasonable periods to take part in teaching and by devoting funds for its maintenance.

4. Financial Assistance.

Medical work in Korea will need considerable financial assistance from the home base countries for a long time to come. It is recommended that Mission Boards adopt the plan of having special medical funds.

5. Christian Work Among Medical Students.

A sustained effort should be made to plant the Gospel in the Government Medical School and to maintain it there by means of a branch of the student Young Men's Christian Association.

6. Permanency of the Task.

Medical work by the Church of Christ in Korea will be necessary at least until in this land the spirit of all medical work whatsoever is the spirit of Christ.

WOMEN'S WORK

X. WOMEN'S WORK

A problem of India is the joint one of the failure of man and woman alike to live above their environment and their lower natures. Tennyson's oft-quoted lines suggest some of its complications:

The woman's cause is man's; they rise or sink
Together, dwarfed or godlike, bond or free;
If she be small, slight-natured, miserable,
How shall men grow?

So, too, in freer China and in freest Japan the degradation of man causes woman's degradation; and her estate reacts upon him and upon their offspring. While Buddhism and Confucianism have treated her relatively well as compared with Hinduism and Mohammedanism, Asiatic womanhood awaits Christian redemption, and manhood will through it also rise Government in Japan has loosened the thrall of woman's ignorance; China is rapidly awakening to the necessity of woman's education as a national asset, and girls' schools are the precursors of women's colleges supported by the State. Britain in India in 1911 reported 1,600,763 females as able to read and write; yet there were also 151,397,030 who could not read a single line. But in all government supported schools, the fear of the Lord which is the beginning of wisdom, and the precepts of Jesus are not taught, save as missionaries do it as an extra in their grants-in-aid schools. Distinctively Christian education is the centre of the conference discussions of womanhood. From kindergarten to college character-building, home-making and service to the Church must be ever in view.

In these progressive nations of Asia the industrial problem is looming ever larger on the horizon. In the great cities of Japan and in a few in China girls and young women are wage earners,—often in factories—concerning whom the Japanese leaders at Tokyo say: "In view of the changing commercial and industrial conditions of Japan, it is imperative that a comprehensive and detailed study be made of the conditions, physical, social and spiritual, under which a large body of young women work in factories, shops, offices and other places of business, in order to learn more fully their temptations and problems, with a view to introducing a greatly enlarged and, if need be, an entirely new type of social and evangelistic work for the young women who from necessity or otherwise are finding their activities outside the home." This is one reason for the frequent emphasis of social studies for women and of social service. China urges the importance of supporting reform bureaus; and generally the broad programme of the Young Women's Christian Association is recommended for such service.

The girls and women of the Church must be better cared for. One conference suggests that pastoral care be by women, since in India personal and sympathetic leading is desirable. In that Empire, where ninety per cent. of the women live in villages, the largest part of the work is among urban populations, whereas the larger operations should be in rural communities where the greater need prevails. In China an opposite neglect should be remedied by giving appropriate training to enable Christian women to win ladies of the higher classes. In such residences secondary wives are often found for whom special efforts should be made, particularly when a better sentiment causes them to be released by the husband. It is also suggested that in the highest women's training institutions—at Nanking, for example—the attempt be made to bring in ladies of the better educated community. Literature for women is another provision which is urged.

Far more thorough preparation for women's work should be made at home, while a rising standard of efficiency makes it equally necessary to provide better trained women evangelists afield. This means for India more than the present three colleges open to Christian women. It ought to make such workers worthy of the equal status with the foreign missionaries, which the India National Conference suggests, and of the closing paragraph of this chapter wherein Japanese missionaries and leaders call for the fullest co-ordination of men's and women's Christian work and for the due representation of women in counsel and administration.

Colombo Conference

1. Lack of Leaders.

With regard to women's work the Conference finds that there is a lack of leaders from among the Ceylonese women and a paucity of European women workers.

2. Official and Social Status.

To remove the deficiency in the number of Ceylonese women workers, the Conference suggests that suitable Ceylonese women missionaries should receive exactly the same official and social status as the foreign workers. Moreover, the marked results which follow the employment of foreign missionary ladies entirely justify the extension of this foreign agency.

3. Multiplication of Boarding Schools.

Owing to the great difficulty of placing women as teachers in remote villages the Conference suggests the multiplication of simple inexpensive Anglo-vernacular girls' boarding schools.

4. Voluntary Church Work.

The non-realization by a large proportion of the women and girls of the congregations of their duty to undertake voluntary church work is a further defect.

5. Medical Work.

The Conference desires to record its conviction that the extension of simple medical work for women and children in backward districts is to be desired, as it has proved itself an invaluable evangelistic agency where tried.

6. Work for Moslems.

The Conference rejoices to learn that work for Mohammedan women is receiving considerable attention.

Allahabad Conference

1. Strengthening of Missionary Staff of Schools.

This Conference recommends that the missionary staff of middle and high schools be strengthened, in order to avoid gaps in the work when missionaries go on furlough.

2. Mission Study and Social Service.

The evangelistic spirit should be fostered among the pupils in our girls' schools by organizing mission study classes, and by setting the pupils at work among servants' children and in Sunday schools.

3. More Missionaries.

We recommend that a larger number of missionaries be sent out for evangelistic work, and that they be given the first year on the field for language study.

4. Status of Indian Women Workers.

Indian women workers should be given positions of greater responsibility, and an effort be made to give to those of marked spiritual ability and educational qualifications an equal status with that of the foreign missionary.

5. Correlation to Men's Work.

The work of zenana missionaries should be correlated to the men's work, so that in families where the women are being taught the men may also be visited by a male missionary.

6. Joint Summer Schools.

We recommend that union summer schools for women be held in connection with the union summer schools for men.

7. Medical Missionaries.

We recommend that a larger number of medical missionaries be sent to strengthen the staff in existing hospitals, and that provision be made for establishing dispensaries in smaller centres.

India National Conference

NOTE.—Many of the findings occurring under other reports of this Conference refer to women's work. Here only matters requiring special emphasis are dealt with.

1. Need for Rural Evangelistic Work.

This Conference would call attention to the fact that about 90 per cent. of the women of India live in villages, and that, on the other hand, by far the largest part of Christian women work among the urban populations. Believing that the need of village women is, if possible, even greater than that of women in the cities, this Conference urges that a larger number of women workers, both European and Indian, be set apart for rural evangelistic work.

2. Pastoral Care of Women by Women.

In view of the dense ignorance and miserable condition of the women entering the Church in mass movements and of their need of personal and sympathetic leading, this Conference urges that special attention be paid to the work of pastoral care of women by women, and that a larger number of women missionaries be sent out for this work, since it will so deeply affect the strength and the vitality of the future Indian Church.

3. Part Time Itinerating by Institutional Workers.

In order to bring about a better correlation of educational and medical work with district work, and in order that women workers in institutions may become better acquainted with the conditions of life in the country districts, this Conference urges that such workers be enabled to spend part of the year in itinerating.

4. Simple Evangelistic Literature.

This Conference wishes to emphasize the need of a very simple and attractive evangelistic literature for the less educated women and young people,—a vast need that is practically untouched.

5. Co-operation in Training of Bible Women.

As the need for Indian women workers, both evangelistic and pastoral, is so great, and as in the past the work has sometimes suffered on account of the somewhat scanty mental and spiritual qualifications of the workers, this Conference urges that greater attention should be paid to educating and fitting them for their work, and that, wherever possible, Missions should combine in the training of Bible-women, with a view to greater efficiency and fruitfulness.

6. Illiteracy Among Indian Women.

This Conference would draw the attention of the Boards and home Churches to the state of illiteracy among Indian women (less than one per cent. of the entire female population being literate), also to the urgent need this implies and to the vast field it offers.

7. Multiplying Elementary Girls' Schools.

In view of the importance of elementary education as an evangelistic force and of the fact that in many rural centres the opportunity of establishing girls' schools is still open to Christian Missions, while every year, nay, almost every month, sees more of these doors closed through the increased activity of other educational agencies, this Conference strongly urges Missions to embrace the present opportunity to multiply the number of elementary girls' schools, especially in areas where as yet no strong Christian community exists, and to secure for this work from the home base much greater support than is supplied at present.

8. Comity and Co-operation in Education.

This Conference recommends that the principles of comity be carefully observed in all existing educational institutions; that, where necessary, forces be redistributed to prevent overlapping; and that, for the sake of economy and efficiency, Missions should co-operate in all forms of education.

9. United Christian Colleges for Women Needed.

This Conference would draw attention to the fact that there are only three women's colleges of the first grade in the whole of the Indian Empire as compared with nearly one hundred for men. This Conference therefore cordially welcomes the recommendation of the Madras and Bombay Conferences, that united Christian colleges for women should be established, and trusts that this policy will be adopted in every province that does not possess such a college.

10. Women's Medical Missions.

This Conference desires to express deep thankfulness to God for the part which women's medical missions have played in caring for the physical and spiritual needs of some of the millions of India's women, such multitudes of whom live and die without medical aid in their times of suffering and with no message of hope to their burdened souls.

11. More Women Medical Missionaries Needed.

This Conference views the present diminution of candidates for this service with pain, and strongly urges that a definite effort be made by all Christian workers in touch with schools and colleges, both in this land and at home, to bring this form of Christlike ministry prominently before students, with a view to attracting them to it in large numbers.

12. Training Women Medical Workers.

This Conference finds that the co-operation of the various mission bodies is urgently required for the training of Indian Christian women for all grades of medical service. In this connection attention is directed to the work and claims of the Women's Christian Medical College in Ludhiana, an interdenominational institution already in existence for the service of all Missions and appealing to all for more united support.

13. Training and Status in Leadership.

This Conference urges that Indian women be trained for positions of responsibility and that an effort be made to give to those of marked spiritual ability and educational qualifications an equal status with the foreign missionary.

14. Missionary Training at the Home Base.

This Conference recommends that all women missionaries should receive training at home in educational methods and principles of teaching, especially Bible teaching, and that their training should include such medical instruction as will fit them to help women and girls in their peculiar necessities.

15. Co-ordination of Men's and Women's Work.

This Conference regrets that in not a few Missions there has been a serious lack of co-ordination between men's work and women's work, resulting in waste of effort and in one-sided development. This Conference, therefore, urges that women's work be correlated to that of men in all its branches, and also that there should be definite co-operation between men and women in the administration of mission work, in order to link the different branches for more effective service.

1. China's Women Coming to Their Own.

In view of the prominent and responsible position in the Church and in the social and political life of China which it is evident the Chinese women of the future will be expected to fill, we realize the importance of increased effort in aiding them to prepare themselves for these new responsibilities.

2. The Type of Missionaries Needed.

The present crisis makes it imperative that the missionaries sent to China be women of adaptability, special training and marked spirituality, who will develop and utilize the wealth of material found in China's womanhood.

3. Evangelistic Work and Workers.

All the women of the Church should be prepared for, and enlisted in, evangelistic work. Many more women should be trained for work as Bible-women. Missions should unite in giving higher training to prepare special Bible-women for work among the educated and cultured classes.

4. Elevation of the Home Life.

There should be a concentration of effort in the elevation of the home life, and in the discouraging by all workers of too early betrothals and marriages.

5. Literature.

A greater use should be made of the literature available for women and children, and the preparation of more should be undertaken at once. The Women's Messenger, published by the Christian Literature Society, should be extensively circulated in both Christian and non-Christian homes.

6. Education.

In educational work for girls and young women the policy outlined for boys and young men should be followed as far as practicable. Some missionaries of special training, experience, adaptability and wide outlook in educational matters are urgently needed for all the larger educational centres, while the Chinese should be encouraged to open mixed schools of the lower elementary grade, employing women as teachers.

7. General Aims.

The work of women for women along the lines of evangelization, kindergarten, primary schools, healing, nursing and home hygiene should be developed on a scale commensurate with the opportunity. The Christian women of China, in their great task, should have the best preparation the West can bring or give them.

Shanghai Conference

1. Securing of Volunteer Evangelistic Workers.

The new day for which we have prayed and which has now dawned in China gives unique opportunities for women's work. The shaping of the new life of China's women should not be left to non-Christian influences. The need of more women evangelists, Chinese and foreign, is everywhere imperative. As a means to secure volunteer evangelistic workers, we recommend:—

- (1) The use of the Volunteer Movement already in existence, as a personal workers' band, to supply teachers for day schools, also evangelists in hospitals and in other charitable institutions.
- (2) The organization of groups of women to do evangelistic work under the direction of the missionary, giving especial attention to former students of Christian schools, to ex-patients of hospitals, and to the extension of work into unoccupied fields.
- (3) The enlistment of school girls for the distribution of Christian literature in their homes.
- (4) The reconsecration of ourselves so that by prayer and example we may incite Chinese women church members to voluntary service.

2. Recommendations Regarding Higher Education.

Our problem is the whole field of Chinese womankind. Higher education is needed to supply the field with workers. We therefore recommend:—

- (1) The plan for a women's college, proposed by the committee appointed in 1911 by the Central China Christian Education Union.
- (2) The maintaining of union high schools in strategic centres, wherever possible, as a local standard.
- (3) That Mandarin be included as a branch of study in all girls' schools, in order to harmonize education.
- (4) The appointment of women representatives for the correlation of work in girls' schools, to co-operate with the East China Educational Commission on schools for boys.

3. A Language School for the Wu Dialects.

Since women's work demands a knowledge of the local dialect, we approve of the establishment of a language school for foreign missionaries for the study of the Wu dialects.

4. Literature for Educated Non-Christian Women.

Recognizing a deplorable lack of literature suitable for educated non-Christian women, we recommend:—

- (1) That a commission be appointed to co-operate with the similar commission of the Young Women's Christian Association, to prepare books necessary for Bible study.

- (2) That all Christian teachers who have originated or adapted courses of Bible study for women, send to this commission notes on those courses, looking toward publication; that all teachers who have used or adapted lectures relating to social welfare submit notes of them in Chinese to this commission.
- (3) That each centre of women's work appoint an agency for the Women's Messenger (Nü To Pao), and that each missionary be responsible for contributing such matter as is generally of interest and help.

5. Nanking Union Bible School for Women.

We approve the plan for the Union Bible School for Women at Nanking and recommend that the course of study there taught be of such standard as to gain the attendance of the more highly educated young women.

6. Special Bible Training During School Holidays.

We suggest the holding of a Bible school or schools for special Bible training during school holidays.

Tsinanfu Conference

1. Present Needs and Opportunities.

There is urgent need for the more extensive reaching of the unevangelized women in the country districts and in the cities; also for the systematic instruction of the women of the Church; and many opportunities are opening up for work among all classes of women at the present time.

2. More Foreign Evangelistic Workers Needed.

We urge upon the home Boards the immediate necessity of sending out more foreign women workers who shall devote themselves to evangelistic work in city and country.

3. A Union Bible Women's Training School.

We favour the establishment of a union Bible women's training school for Shantung, at some central location, for the higher education of women evangelists who shall have previously finished a prescribed course of study in the affiliated station training schools. The central training school should have a preparatory department for the benefit of stations having no such station schools.

4. Giving Chinese Women Full Share in All Phases of Work.

We heartily commend the plan of giving the women a full share in all phases of work, as exemplified by the Chinese home missionary societies in certain places in this province.

5. More Girls' Primary Schools.

We favour the speedy establishment of more girls' primary schools in country districts, these to be under Chinese management in so far as this is practicable.

6. Union Institutions for the Higher Education of Girls.

We favour the establishment of union institutions for the higher education of girls, these to provide for kindergarten training, normal and college work.

7. Need for Rescue Work in the Larger Cities.

We emphasize the great need for rescue work in Shantung, especially in the larger cities.

Peking Conference

1. Working in Manifold Ways through the Chinese.

The women sent from the West to China, as their number must be limited, should be qualified to take up lines of work in which they can multiply their influence by training and inspiring their Chinese sisters. This can be done, not only in high schools, colleges, Bible schools and training schools of various kinds, but in practical work, going with those in training to give lecture courses, working with them in organizing for sanitary and moral reforms, leading bands of school girls to orphanages and street schools for children, co-operating with those who work in the temple fairs and examining classes taught by Bible-women.

2. Character Training.

In view of the fact that women will have a large share in the new national life of China, that they must meet false views as to the most fundamental relationships of life, new temptations and new responsibilities, the importance of character training cannot be over-emphasized. The walls which guarded the young girl are being demolished rapidly, and the spiritual walls which can protect her purity and peace are rising only slowly. The girls who leave our Christian homes and schools to enter these new conditions must know more of the world than their mothers did, must have more poise and self-control; above all, they must have the spiritual power of the indwelling Christ and the sense of a divine call to the service.

3. Evangelistic Work and the Advanced Training it Calls For.

Evangelistic work should be conducted not only along the old lines of Bible-women's work in homes and hospitals, but where the way is opened, through preaching and teaching women and children at temple fairs and on set days in street chapels. Women must be trained in larger numbers who can carry Christ's message of love into every village of China, and can look forward to carrying this work into the great, unoccupied field of China's dependencies. More advanced training should be provided to fit women for evangelistic work, not only among the educated classes, but among those whose minds are so atrophied by ignorance and suffering that only special genius and Divine power reach them.

4. Kindergarten Training Schools.

There is an unlimited field for the Christian kindergarten, reaching from the highest to the lowest classes of the population. Our mission kindergarten training schools should be increased in number, the standards kept high, and non-Christian students in training for government positions should be admitted.

5. Increasing Educational Work in Quantity and Quality.

We must increase our educational work in quantity, so that we can provide the teachers needed in our mission schools, and respond also to calls for help from non-Christian schools. We must increase it in quality and fit our graduates from college and training school to conduct public meetings for women, to investigate social and industrial problems and to study religious questions.

6. Women Physicians and Trained Nurses.

There is a great field of usefulness for Chinese women physicians and trained nurses. They should study and grapple with such problems as the waste of infant life, the scourge of tuberculosis, and the abuses in connection with factory life.

7. Broad Foundations for Christian Home Life.

While we send large numbers of well-educated, consecrated women into all the lines of service in the Church and society, it is of the utmost importance to realize our ideal of Christian homes. The question will still be, How can Chinese women teachers be provided for extensive educational work of high grade while still laying broad foundations for the home life, and for that Christian heredity which should enrich the future life of China?

8. Outside Activities of Christian Schools.

Intercourse between Christian and non-Christian schools should be maintained by mutual invitations to lectures and school functions, and by union in such societies as the Reform Bureau, the Anti-cigarette League and in philanthropic work. Indirectly, this intercourse will help to raise the standards in both classes of schools.

9. Young Women's Christian Association.

There are many openings for such work as can be best done by the Young Women's Christian Association, and it should be urged to occupy all important centres, prepared not only to work in schools but also to open hostels, organize clubs, conduct lecture courses and to lead in humanitarian movements, all in co-operation with the Missions now in those centres.

10. Unwholesome Social Practices.

A Chinese Woman's Alliance should be formed to carry into effect the abolishing of early marriages and the practice of taking secondary wives, and this Alliance should urge the Government to incorporate these reforms in the law of the Republic.

11. The Church Must Care for its Own.

Within the Church the problem of instructing all the women and children is a serious one, and as the Church grows it must more and more care for its own, unless foreign women can be sent to the field in much larger numbers.

Hankow Conference

1. Uncared-for Classes.

The following classes are uncared for in this area:—

- (1) Secondary wives.
- (2) Factory workers.
- (3) Prisoners, singing girls and fallen women.
- (4) The insane.

2. A School for Secondary Wives and Slave Girls.

The Conference recommends the establishment of a school to receive secondary wives and slave girls. In consideration of the changing views of the progressive Chinese and of the earnest desire of many leading business men and Christian inquirers to separate from secondary wives, and as it is unadvisable to place these women in any of our existing schools, it is earnestly urged that definite provision be made by which these women may be evangelized and be prepared for lives of self-dependence.

3. Suggested Methods for Reaching Various Needy Groups.

The attention of the Missions is called to the condition of women in factories, and to that of female prisoners, singing girls and fallen women. The Missions should be urged to set apart suitable foreign and Chinese workers to meet the needs of these classes. The attention of the "Door of Hope" in Shanghai should be drawn to the desirability of opening a branch of their work in the Wuhan centre. Further, the Conference would emphasize the desirability of institutional work in connection with the classes above mentioned.

4. An Asylum for the Insane.

An asylum for insane women should be opened in Central China. This is of primary importance in view of the fact that no provision is made throughout the entire Yangtze Valley for this class.

5. A More Adequate Provision of Educational Facilities.

The Conference finds that the education provided for the child, the girl and the woman is quite inadequate. The ordinary schools should be supplemented by kindergartens, by day-schools for women and by better facilities for training women workers. In order to meet this need, training schools for Bible-women, for day-school teachers, and for kindergartners, should be made as efficient as possible, by strengthening and developing the present mission training schools, and by the establishment of a strong union training school for each province.

6. Teaching of Women in Station Bible Classes.

In order to facilitate the teaching of women in station Bible classes, we recommend that union curricula be prepared by a committee appointed by the Federated Union Council.

7. Systematic Training for Preachers' and Teachers' Wives.

Some provision should be made for the systematic training in biblical and other subjects for Chinese preachers' and teachers' wives.

China National Conference

NOTE.—Generally speaking, it is to be understood that the recommendations of the China National Conference on Christian Education apply to the education of girls as well as to that of boys.

1. Need for More Evangelists, both Chinese and Foreign.

The present conditions present an unparalleled opportunity for widespread and aggressive evangelization. The imperative need for more evangelists is revealed by the many untouched fields. There are hundreds of walled cities and thousands of towns in China in which the women are absolutely unreached as yet, and even in supposedly occupied places, in villages and country, there are multitudes of women who have never had an opportunity to hear the Gospel. Since the number of Christian workers who devote their whole time to direct evangelistic effort is greatly out of proportion to the need of these untouched fields, we urge the immediate necessity of a much larger number of evangelists, both Chinese and foreign. The number of women missionaries is hopelessly inadequate.

2. Enlarging the Scope of Evangelistic Work.

Because of a larger life into which Chinese women are entering and the fast-opening doors of opportunity, the scope of evangelistic work must be enlarged.

- (1) Suitable women should be discovered and specially trained for work among women of the wealthy and the educated classes.
- (2) Union evangelistic meetings for women should be held at least once a year.
- (3) The need of evangelistic workers should be brought home to the young women in mission schools, and they should be urged to give fullest weight to this claim upon them.

3. Importance of Character Training.

In view of the fact that women will have a large share in the new national life, and that they must meet false views as to the most fundamental relationships of life, as well as new temptations and new responsibilities, the importance of character training cannot be over-estimated. The walls which guarded the young girl are being demolished rapidly, and the spiritual walls which can protect her purity and peace are rising only slowly. The girls who leave Christian homes and schools to enter these new conditions must know more of the world than their mothers did, must have more poise and self-control, and above all they must have the spiritual power of the indwelling Christ and the sense of a divine call to service.

4. Present Intellectual Needs of Chinese Women.

Principals and other leaders in our educational work should study the educational systems of the Far East, with a view to taking advantage of their excellencies. Our educational system should be adapted to meet the present needs of Chinese women.

5. More Primary Schools; Women Teachers in Mixed Schools.

We favour the speedy establishment of more and better primary schools for girls, especially in country districts; also the employment of women as teachers in lower elementary mixed schools.

The men teachers in these schools should be replaced by women as fast as practicable.

6. An Unlimited Field for the Christian Kindergarten.

There is an unlimited field for the Christian kindergarten. The number of our Christian kindergarten training schools should be increased and non-Christian students in training for government positions should be admitted.

7. Quantity and Quality of Educational Work.

We must increase our educational work in quantity so that we can provide the teachers needed in missionary schools, and respond to calls for help from non-Christian schools. We must increase it in quality and fit our graduates from colleges and training schools to investigate social and industrial problems, to study religious questions, and in every way to be leaders of Chinese women in the regeneration of China.

8. Equal Opportunities in University Education for Women.

Whenever universities for graduate work for men are established they should in some way provide equal opportunities for women, though not in the form of co-education, and not in all cases along the same lines of specialization.

9. Union Colleges for Women.

Union colleges for women should be established, or existing schools enlarged, in several suitable centres, the aim being to have the scope and quality of the work done not inferior to that in similar institutions for men. These institutions should include advanced normal, kindergarten and Bible training, and also various branches of domestic science.

10. Union Institutions for Normal and Bible Training.

We favour the establishment of union institutions, if possible at least one in each province, to provide for normal and Bible training, but less advanced than that mentioned above.

11. Instruction for Special Classes of Women.

We recommend the opening of more schools for both Christian and non-Christian married women. In addition, systematic Christian instruction should be given by means of daily classes to fit women for the duties of the Christian life. Definite provision should also be made for secondary wives who have been separated from their husbands.

12. Special Needs of the Larger Educational Centres.

Women of special training, experience, adaptability and broad outlook in educational matters are urgently needed for all the larger educational centres.

13. Federating Existing Institutions.

A definite policy of federation or union of existing institutions should be adopted, to go into effect as soon as possible.

14. The Home Boards and Field Educational Problems.

We urge a more intimate acquaintance on the part of the home Boards with the educational problems of the whole field rather than with those of only one section or department of the work.

15. Christian Literature.

We recommend the establishment of women's reading circles wherever practicable. A list of the best books now available for women and children should be published for the convenience of such reading circles and of school libraries. The following kinds of literature are needed:—

- (1) Books setting forth Christian ideals with reference to the dignity and vocation of woman, to counteract the pernicious ideas regarding family life now promulgated among women.
- (2) Books in simple language on such subjects as hygiene, sanitation and the training of children.
- (3) Simple gospel tracts for women of limited education.
- (4) Kindergarten literature and songs, songs for general use, child psychology, domestic science, eugenics and mother-craft.
- (5) Pure, stimulating and interesting books of fiction, for old and young.

16. Urgent Need for Medical Relief.

In view of the urgent need for medical relief for the masses of women and children, we urge:—

- (1) An increased supply of foreign women physicians and trained nurses.
- (2) The reinforcing of the undermanned staffs of existing hospitals in accord with the recommendations of the China Medical Missionary Association.
- (3) The establishment, if possible in co-operation with the Chinese, of a woman's hospital in at least every city of former prefectural rank.
- (4) The opening of hospitals and dispensaries in country towns as the number of Chinese physicians increases, thus bringing medical aid within reach of the rural population.
- (5) The strengthening of the existing women's medical schools in North and South China, and the taking of steps towards the immediate establishment of a union medical school in Central China.

17. Spreading Knowledge of the Laws of Hygiene.

Realizing the dense ignorance of the Chinese woman regarding the simplest laws of hygiene, we recommend an extensive use of popular lectures for women on the care of infants, prevention of infection, etc., together with the preparation of simple literature on these subjects for tract distribution.

18. Social Service.

The changing customs and the coming into public life of Chinese women challenges Christian women, both Chinese and foreign, to wider work in the field of service, and this service will form a point of contact between Christians and non-Christians.

19. Chinese Women's Alliance.

A Chinese Women's Alliance should be formed to carry into effect the abolishing of early betrothals and marriages, the practice of taking secondary wives, and the employment of domestic slave girls. This Alliance should urge the Government to incorporate these reforms in the laws of the Republic.

20. Study of Social and Industrial Problems.

Christian and non-Christian women should unite to study social and industrial problems, such as child welfare, healthful and modest dress for girls and women, the physical and moral health of women in factories and in other employments and the care of the unfortunate classes. Some of these objects can be best attained by forming branches of such existing humanitarian organizations as the Red Cross Society, the Reform Bureau, the Anti-cigarette League and the Anti-footbinding Society.

21. Social Reform and the Regeneration of the Individual.

In view of the misconceptions which prevail as to woman's "freedom and power," it seems well, while we encourage "New China" in the many wise reforms advocated, to take a conservative attitude as to the position and privileges of woman, and to impress upon her that the elevation of the home is the true goal of all social service. Inasmuch as this end can be attained only by the regeneration of the individual through the transforming power of the Gospel, therefore in all social effort the primary aim should be to bring each one into personal contact with Christ.

22. Young Women's Christian Association.

There are many openings for such work as can best be done by the Young Women's Christian Association, which should be urged to occupy all important centres, prepared not only to work among women for their social, physical, intellectual and spiritual development, but to open hostels, organize clubs, conduct lecture courses,—all in co-operation with the Missions now in those centres.

Moukden Conference1. Young Women's Christian Association.

With a view to reaching some of the classes as yet unevangelized, such as the wives and daughters of officials and better class merchants, also teachers and students in government schools, this Conference recommends the speedy establishment of Young Women's Christian Association work in the larger centres of the province.

2. Reaching the Women in the Villages.

The Conference recommends that arrangements should be made for more vigorous efforts to reach the women in the villages:—

- (1) By an increase in the number of village Bible-women.
- (2) By regular preaching at temple fairs where this is possible.
- (3) By the institution of Bible study classes.
- (4) By an increase in the number of primary schools for girls, which can at the same time be used as evangelizing centres.

3. Disparity Between Women and Men in Church Membership.

The Conference views with concern the serious disparity between the number of women members in Manchuria compared with the number of men, namely, 6,000 to 14,000; it therefore impresses upon all Christian men the urgent duty of evangelizing the women in their own homes.

4. Bible Classes for Baptized Women.

The Conference recommends that arrangements be made for the better instruction and building up of women in the Christian faith by the organizing of regular courses of Bible study for all classes of women after baptism.

5. Medical Education for Women.

The Conference calls attention to the fact that the findings of the National Continuation Committee Conference at Shanghai on Medical Missions apply to women's work as well as to men's. In the case of medical education for women we recommend that schools should be first established for the training of maternity and district nurses.

6. A Rescue Home for Manchuria.

The Conference recommends the establishment of at least one rescue home in Manchuria, which should have connected with it some form of industrial work.

Seoul Conference

(Not Discussed)

Tokyo Conference of Japanese Leaders

1. Social and Evangelistic Work Among Young Women.

In view of the changing commercial and industrial conditions of Japan, it is imperative that a comprehensive and detailed study be made of the conditions, physical, social and spiritual, under which a large body of young women work in factories, shops, offices and other places of business, in order to learn more fully their temptations and problems, with a view to introducing a greatly enlarged and, if need be, an entirely new type of social and evangelistic work for the young women who from necessity or otherwise are finding their activities outside the home.

2. A Christian College for Women.

This Conference endorses the plan to establish a first-class Christian college for women, as high as, or higher than, any school for women at present existing in Japan, in order that women may be better fitted as teachers, or for any other calling into which the enlarging life may bring them.

3. Christian Hostels for Government Schools.

Christian hostels in increasing numbers in cities are of supreme importance, if the student life in government schools is to be touched in any adequate spiritual way.

4. Training for Religious Work.

In accordance with the advancement of society, the standard of training for Bible-women, or for women engaged in any religious work, should be raised. The standard for entrance into Bible schools should be at least equal to that of graduation from girls' high schools.

5. Opportunities for Study and Investigation Abroad.

Opportunities for study abroad should be given to a certain number of promising graduates from Christian girls' schools in Japan, much in the same way as the Government has done for some of the graduates from the Higher Normal School for Women. Opportunities and facilities for investigating methods of educational and religious work abroad should be given to a certain number of Japanese Christian women already engaged in educational or religious work.

Japan National Conference

i. Education.

- (1) This Conference endorses the plan for a first-class Christian college for women, equal or superior in standard and equipment to any school at present existing for the higher education of women.
- (2) The need for better equipment of existing Christian schools should be emphasized in order that Christian education for women may regain and maintain its leading position.
- (3) It is recommended that opportunities for study abroad be given to some prominent Christian graduates of girls' schools, in much the same way as the Government has done for graduates of the Higher Normal School for Women; and also that opportunities and facilities for investigating methods of educational, social and religious work abroad be given to some specially chosen Japanese Christian women already engaged in such work.
- (4) This Conference emphasizes the supreme importance of establishing Christian hostels in increasing numbers in large cities in order that the student life in government schools may be adequately touched in a spiritual way.

2. Evangelistic Work.

- (1) Under present-day conditions the standard of training for women evangelists, and for women engaged in any other religious work, should be raised; and to that end the standard for entrance into schools for training such workers should in general be at least equal to that of graduation from girls' high schools.
- (2) In order to secure workers of education and culture, Christian teachers and leaders should bear in mind the importance of holding before students and other young women the dignity and privilege of direct Christian service as a life-work.
- (3) Full recognition should be given to women evangelists and other workers, and an adequate rate of salary should be secured for them.

- (4) In order that the life of the Church may be developed and strengthened, great attention should be paid to cultivating among its women the spirit of aggressive Christian work.

3. Social Conditions.

In view of the changing commercial and industrial conditions of Japan, it is imperative that a comprehensive and detailed study be made of the conditions, physical, social and spiritual, under which a large number of young women are working in factories, shops, offices and other places of business, in order to learn more fully their temptations and difficulties, with a view to introducing a greatly enlarged and, if need be, an entirely new type of social and evangelistic work for the young women who from necessity or for other reasons are finding their activities outside the home.

4. Increase in the Number of Missionaries.

- (1) This Conference requests the Mission Boards, in view of the increasing opportunities in all branches of women's work, to give due weight to the needs of this work when providing for the expansion of the whole Christian work in Japan.
- (2) In adding to the number of women missionaries, Mission Boards should keep in mind the need of sending some who in addition to the indispensable gifts of character and spirit, shall be qualified to work with Japanese Christian women in dealing with present social and industrial problems.

5. Co-ordination.

In view of all the foregoing, and also of the great and increasing development of Japanese women and their opportunities, and the dangers as well as possibilities attending the whole women's movement, this Conference desires to emphasize the importance of the fullest co-ordination of men's and women's Christian work, and of the due representation of women in counsel and administration.

6. What should constitute an adequate foreign missionary force for this area? In other words, when could it be said that no further increase of the missionary force is needed?

7. Is it desirable to make a scientific or thorough united survey of this field at the present time? If so, what is the most practical plan to accomplish the task? What would you say as to the wisdom of a periodical review of the field (say, every ten years) by representatives of the Missions at work on the field, to ensure the best distribution of the forces with reference to the better occupation of the field?

tian [Indians] and among the missionaries? To what extent would setting apart men for specified pieces of work for a limited time meet the case?

3. What can be done to ensure a wider and more effective use of the best literature already in existence?

VIII. Co-operation Between Missions

1. How far is the principle of comity being observed in this area in such matters as the occupation of the field, overlapping, church discipline, attitude toward dismissed agents, scale of salaries, etc.? In what respects should this principle be extended? By what means can effect be given to the desires of different Missions as to the observance of the principles of comity?

2. In what respects is a closer co-operation between different Missions in this area desirable?

3. Does satisfactory provision exist for the proper correlation of missionary activities: (1) between missionaries in a given station? (2) between different phases of work in the same Mission? (3) between different Missions in this entire area?

4. Have you a co-operative or federal council of the Missions working in this area? To what extent has it been used and with what results? Wherein should it be improved? What part have the [Indian] Christians on this council? Of the various plans of this kind in operation in different mission fields, which one do you deem most helpful? If there is no such agency, should there be established a closer union of the Missions in this area; and if so, should it be organic, federative or co-operative? How shall it be brought about?

5. In what ways may a close and mutually helpful relation be established between the Continuation Committee as the representative of the missionary forces on the home field, and the missionaries and leaders of the [Indian] Church?

1. Are there facts or considerations in connection with your field, or other matters of importance, which you desire to have brought to the attention of the Missionary Societies and the home constituency? What are the great and important needs which should be met by the home Church?

2. In the light of the discussion of these questions, what points are there on which action should be taken by the bodies concerned in [India]?

APPENDIX B

BUSINESS EFFICIENCY*

Canton Conference

The time and energy of missionaries could be greatly economized by the adequate provision of assistance in administrative and business details, for example, Chinese or foreign treasurers, secretaries, business managers, architects, engineers, printers, stenographers and other experts, also offices at the larger centres where all the Christian forces may find a common centre for the collection and inter-communication of information, and for easy and frequent personal intercourse and consultation on common interests.

Shanghai Conference

1. A General Field Treasurer for Each Mission Board.

Missionary Societies would be much better served by each having a general treasurer, who should be located at the most convenient centre and whose business it would be to do all that is possible to conserve the active missionary's time and strength for his work, and to secure the best possible financial administration. Such an official should be not only an accountant, but also at heart a missionary. Among other benefits that would accrue from such an arrangement, economies might be effected:—

- (1) In obtaining better rates of exchange.
- (2) In the transmitting of funds, payments of passages, etc.
- (3) In the purchasing of local currency in the best known market.

2. Simplifying Returns.

A simplification of the returns to home Boards and Committees is necessary.

3. Standardizing Methods of Book-keeping.

Much time might be saved by each Society standardizing and simplifying the methods of book-keeping in mission stations.

4. Short Usance Drafts.

A saving would be effected by the home Boards being prepared to meet short usance drafts. The shorter the usance, the better the rate of exchange.

5. Transmitting Funds to China.

When ready money is not available and remittances have to be made, the most satisfactory method of transmitting funds from abroad to China is by means of short-term drafts drawn by the Boards upon themselves, or by drafts made upon them by their treasurers in China, rather than by the purchase of remittances by the Boards at home.

* In addition to the subjects covered by the findings as given in the ten chapters of this volume, two others came up for occasional discussion in the Continuation Committee Conferences in Asia. Findings on these two subjects are given in Appendices B and C.

6. Capital Funds.

We suggest that the whole or part of the occasional large gifts received by the Missionary Societies should be used to form or to augment existing capital funds. By this means the home Boards will gradually be in a position to deal with the difficulty occasioned by much of their income being received at the close of their financial year, and thus they would be able to provide appropriated funds as they are required and save the large sums now paid for interest on overdrafts and lost by the employment of long usance drafts.

7. One Treasurer for Several Societies Impracticable.

The question of two or more Missionary Societies uniting under one general treasurer is not felt to be practicable at present, owing to the fact that close personal sympathy is essential to the well-being of the work.

8. Control of Special Funds.

The expenditure of special funds should be subject to the same control on the field as the regular appropriations of the Society.

9. A Central Business Agency for China.

It is very desirable to found or form a Central Business Agency for purchasing and forwarding supplies in Shanghai, working under an advisory council, appointed by the various Missionary Societies.

- (1) Management:—The agency should be under the direction of an advisory council, possibly elected by the mission treasurers and business managers in Shanghai. The management must be in the hands of a capable man in full sympathy with missionary endeavour.
- (2) Finance:—This effort should be supported by small membership subscriptions, deposit accounts and commissions; salary and rent at commencement to be met by the Missions concerned.
- (3) Ultimate scope:—To enable the missionary to do his best work:—
 - a. By making a close study of supply and demand.
 - b. As capital permits, by stocking goods most in demand, and thus gradually building up an efficient Missionary Service Association.

10. Supervision of Building Operations.

Missionary Boards would do well to encourage offers of service from men who have technical training combined with the missionary spirit, and who would be willing to devote themselves to such work as superintending the erection of buildings and performing kindred service which is frequently demanded from missionaries who are without aptitude for such work, resulting in loss of time and money. The ultimate formation of a bureau for the supervision of and advising upon mission architecture is highly desirable in the interests of mission economy.

11. Missionary Dentist.

A missionary dentist should be located in Shanghai by the Societies in this district, working upon a union arrangement.

12. Insurance.

The attention of the Missionary Boards which insure their mission property is called to the desirability of carrying their own insurance.

Tsinanfu Conference

We recommend that there be one man attached to each large station or group of smaller stations who should be responsible for their business. This missionary need not have had a theological course, but should be a man of character, education and culture, who has had some business experience or training and who realizes that in doing what is called secular service he is helping to make the whole work more efficient.

Peking Conference

In order to safeguard the time and energy of specially prepared missionaries, we suggest that each large mission centre secure experts in such lines as building operations, accountant and typist work and business management. The building expert might serve a comparatively large area from a convenient centre. Two or more missions in a given centre might co-operate in supplying an accountant and typist.

China National Conference

Expert business agents, typists and men acquainted with building operations should be attached to the Missions, when the amount of business to be transacted makes it advantageous.

Seoul Conference

1. A General Treasurer for Each Mission.

We recommend the employment, where possible, of a general treasurer by each Mission, as we believe that such an appointment permits the conservation of the time and strength of the active missionaries for the work to which they have been assigned, and also secures the best financial administration.

2. Uniform Methods of Book-keeping.

It is of the first importance that systematic and uniform methods of keeping treasurers' and individual accounts be adopted in all cases in which mission funds are involved.

3. Methods of Procedure in Mission and Station Meetings.

While recognizing that much has already been accomplished in this connection, we believe that business in mission and station meetings could be greatly expedited by the wider adoption of the following methods of procedure:—

- (1) Rules and by-laws should be enacted for the control of all matters under station direction.
- (2) Committees should be created to deal with various departments of station work, with as much "power to act" as can be safely entrusted to them.
- (3) All business coming before station meetings should be presented through the proper committees, the business to be prepared for by full discussion in these committees.
- (4) Debate should be limited in general meetings, without prejudice to the usual power of the chairman to vary, with the assent of the meeting, the limits thus imposed.

4. Statistics.

All station and mission statistics should be carefully collected, tabulated and analyzed, due regard being paid to the principles recommended on this point by the Continuation Committee of the World Missionary Conference.

5. Conferences on Business Methods.

We recommend that mission treasurers and members of the business committees of Missions labouring in Korea meet in joint annual session, at the time of the meeting of the Federal Council, for conference and exchange of ideas.

6. Handling Funds.

Individuals having personal or trust funds to be used in work outside the Mission's annual budget should first secure the consent of the Mission or station to their being used as desired, while special gifts received by individuals for items within the budget should be reported to the mission treasurer without delay.

APPENDIX C

EUROPEAN AND DOMICILED COMMUNITIES*

Colombo Conference

This Conference recommends that a small committee be formed—consisting of the Lord Bishop of Colombo, the Secretary of the Diocese, and the clergymen and ministers in charge of English work in Colombo, and one layman from each of these Churches—to consider the best means of obtaining, and to take practical steps towards securing, active Christian workers as European assistants in the local offices and stores and in pressing this subject on the attention of the home Churches.

Lahore Conference

1. The Domiciled Community.

This Conference much regrets the failure hitherto of the Christian Church (non-Roman) in India sufficiently to recognize the importance, as an element of the Church, of the domiciled community which by its constitution has special qualifications for interpreting the message of the Gospel to the East and which experience shows contains valuable material, and the Conference recommends that special attention be given to the consideration of methods by which this community may be drawn into the work of the Church much more systematically and to a greater extent than at present.

2. Help and Interest of British Residents.

This Conference desires to place on record the deep appreciation of the valuable help rendered to the cause of Christian Missions by the British community in India, and recommends that to a still greater extent the practical help and interest of British residents be secured, as, for example, by inviting officials and others to missionary functions, by enlisting Churches and individuals to do practical mission work, and by holding from time to time joint services for the European and Indian congregations of the same communion.

3. Further Consideration Urged.

This important subject should receive special attention from the National Federal Council for India, provision for which it is hoped may be the outcome of the Calcutta National Continuation Committee Conference.

* In addition to the subjects covered by the findings as given in the ten chapters of this volume, two others came up for occasional discussion in the Continuation Committee Conferences in Asia. Findings on these two subjects are given in Appendices B and C.

India National Conference

1. A Call to the Churches.

This Conference, recognizing that the presence and influence of the European and Anglo-Indian community represents a vital factor in the problem of the evangelization of India, would call upon the Churches to do everything in their power to ensure that the influence of this community is such as to commend Christ to the peoples of India, and would urge all missionaries to take advantage of every opportunity to secure this end, in co-operation with chaplains and other ministers.

2. European and Indian Christians.

Every effort should be made for the realization of the oneness in Christ Jesus of Western and Eastern Christians, and, for this end, all possible steps should be taken to bring the European and Anglo-Indian and the Indian Christian communities into sympathetic touch with each other.

3. Help for Missions from Europeans.

This Conference, while placing on record its deep appreciation of the valuable help rendered to the cause of Christian Missions by many members of the European and Anglo-Indian community, is constrained to recognize that the interest taken in missionary work by the community as a body is wholly inadequate, and recommends that more effort be made to secure, by more intimate personal intercourse, their practical help and interest in the missionary cause, and would urge missionaries to be willing to lead Bible or mission study circles for this purpose.

4. Anglo-Indian Education.

Missionaries should co-operate with school authorities in securing for the children of the Anglo-Indian community a healthy Christian education and in cultivating in them the missionary spirit and the sense of their personal responsibility for the evangelization of those around them.

5. Comity.

In work for the European and Anglo-Indian community, the same principles of comity should be observed as are observed in work among Indians.

6. Investigation of the Problem.

This Conference recommends that an investigation be made as to the relation of members of the European and Anglo-Indian community to the missionary cause; that this investigation when completed be submitted to the National Missionary Council with recommendations for action; and that the Committee of Investigation consist of the following members:—

The Bishop of Lahore, Convener,	Miss E. Hunter,
A. C. Harte, Secretary,	Bishop F. W. Warne,
The Hon. Mr. W. R. Gourlay,	Rev. J. A. Graham,
Rev. J. Macrae,	Mrs. Whitehead.
